Battered Calif. bracing for more

High surf and mudslides combined to topple Malibu beach house into sea while mud nearly buries car in Los Angeles

Times News Services

LOS ANGELES — A state of emergency has been declared and the National Guard placed on alert in most of southern California, inundated by a week-long series of devastating storms that have left at least 27 persons dead and four others missing. Total storm damage is estimated at $300 million.

At least 27 homes have been destroyed, and another 760 have been damaged. Hundreds of vehicles have been destroyed or damaged, and 4,500 persons have been evacuated.

A Malibu home toppled into the Pacific Ocean and others were overrun by mud or threatened by pounding surf as weary citizens braced today for its sixth rainstorm in a week.

Thousands of persons were forced to flee as mudslides and walls of water up to 4½ metres high destroyed or threatened homes. Almost 100,000 of citizens in northern California were without power.

As water cascaded over the tops of dams in Utah and levees crumbled in southern California, a tornado struck near an airliner taking on passengers in Fresno, Calif.

"It was just like a big hand coming out of the sky," said James Cost, who saw the twister strike the Airport Picadilly Inn. "It just scooped up everything in sight and threw it around."

A hotel worker said "a few guests were pretty well shaken up, but no one was hurt." Three to five inches of three-quarter inch hail also hit the airfield.

Food shortages were reported north of downtown Los Angeles in the Topanga Canyon, where a 4½-metre wall of water gushed through the exclusive neighborhood.

Traffic jams stretched for 15 kilometres in Phoenix, Ariz., after the usually dry Salt River flooded even more, cutting the number of crossings to two from 10.

Estimated property damage in southern California is running at $252 million. Crop damage so far in the fertile region that supplies much of the winter lettuce and citrus in the United States was estimated at $26 million.

Arizona officials estimated damage at $40 million; and Utah officials, more than $1 million.

Rainfall in Los Angeles since Feb. 13, when the storms began, has measured 29.5 centimetre, pushing the total for the season to 52 cm, almost 27 cm more than normal.

Agricultural officials said hard-hit crops in southern California included citrus, strawberries, broccoli, cabbage, lettuce and flowers. Irrigation systems suffered $10 million damage, they said.

Heavy snow warnings were posted for the Colorado Rockies where six inches of snow was expected.

Gov. Jerry Brown put 18,000 National Guard troops on standby alert to provide assistance in air and ground transportation and flood control. Another 1,000 members of the state's Civilian Conservation Corps also were put on standby.

Produce prices to go sky high?

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Floods that have devastated southern California fruit and vegetable crop areas could send prices here skyrocketing within 10 days according to a B.C. agriculture ministry spokesman.

"We get a tremendous amount of products from California at this time of year," said Jim Alcock, supervisor of market information, who monitors California weather, crop and market information.

California agriculture officials report that hard-hit crops in the southern part of the state include citrus, strawberries, broccoli, cabbage, lettuce and flowers.

B.C. currently is importing large quantities of California asparagus, broccoli, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery and lettuce.

As an example of what could happen, Alcock cited floods which coincided with lettuce planting around last Christmas in California.

Lettuce, which was normally sold at a wholesale level here for $3 to $4.50 a case, rocketed to $18 and $20 a case, resulting in per head prices to the consumer of $1.20 and more.

Alcock said however, he does not think the devastation in California will be sufficient to dry up supplies completely.

Could local producers pick up the slack?

"We certainly have the capacity to supply all our needs within our production season," Alcock said. "but not at this time."

It's official: U.S. boycotts Games

Times News Services

The United States will boycott the Olympic games in Moscow this summer since there is "no sign whatsoever" of a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said today in Bonn, West Germany.

He indicated U.S. willingness to talk with Moscow about Soviet troop withdrawals, but stressed Washington's response to the Soviet invasion "is not a short-term commitment to band-aid action and quick fixes or an attempt to come up with what amounts to a public relations gimmick, which will be forgotten tomorrow, but is instead a response to what is seen as a long-term problem."

U.S. officials stressed the response included holding firm to a boycott of the Moscow Olympic Games. President Carter's Feb. 20 deadline for Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan expired today.

Asked if the U.S. Olympic Committee would go along with a boycott, Carter said the committee "understands the government's position. The government has no doubt about what the organization, what American citizens who happen to be athletes . . . will do under the circumstances."

A White House source, who has been involved in the administration's efforts to win international support for Carter's policy, said that "about 50 governments publicly and privately seem to be in favor" of the boycott.

He refused to name all the states, but said they include European allies as well as Canada, New Zealand and Australia. He said the list also includes at least two African states and most Islamic countries, which are upset over the occupation of Afghanistan.

However, Liberal insiders said Tuesday Prime Minister-designate Pierre Trudeau will likely wait until close to May 24 before deciding whether to support Carter's boycott call. Prime Minister Clark said before his government was defeated Monday that he would ask Canadian athletes to boycott the Moscow Games if Soviet soldiers were still in Afghanistan today.

U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany met for more than three hours today in an effort to co-ordinate a response to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. But Schmidt refused to commit his country to the proposed boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

Towboat strike looms

A large portion of B.C.'s towboat industry could be shut down by the end of the week — halting heating oil shipments to Vancouver Island — unless a contract agreement is reached for 550 cooks, deckhands and oilers.

The Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers served 72-hour strike notice Tuesday after rejecting the latest offer from 12 towboat companies.

A strike would halt 70 per cent of all coastal tug operations, including the movement of oil to the island and lumber, chemicals and wood chips to many coastal mills.

Union pickets also would affect thousands of waterfront union members. The B.C. Federation of Labor is planning a meeting with all affiliated unions that might be affected by the picket action.

The CBRT did not have to serve 72-hour strike notice because the towboat companies come under federal labor law.

However, the union decided to conform with the federation of labor's policy of giving notice so that other unions affected would be aware of the situation.

The latest offer from the Council of Marine Carriers, representing the towboat companies, was for a $1-an-hour general [illegible] each year of a two-year agreement.

The contract would be retroactive to Oct. 31, 1979 and would include increases in several job categories.

Joe to hand the tiller to Pierre next week

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Joe Clark meets with his cabinet today to prepare next week's transition of power over to Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Liberal party.

Clark, who was given a tumultuous, tear-filled welcome Tuesday by a crowd of supporters at Ottawa's international airport after flying in from Edmonton, plans to turn over the reins of power to Trudeau early next week.

During the five-hour flight to Ottawa, Clark's press secretary, Jock Osler, told reporters that Clark would resign his Conservative government Monday or Tuesday.

Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer, who would normally officiate at the swearing-in ceremonies for the new government, is resting comfortably today at the National Defence Medical Centre where he underwent emergency surgery Tuesday for the removal of a portion of inflamed intestine.

His office said Gov.-Gen. Schreyer spent a good night "and actually his condition is excellent because he's in good health."

Meanwhile, Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed said today in Edmonton he will reject any oil pricing offer from the new Liberal government unless benefits to the province are at least equal to the tentative agreement reached with the Conservatives.

$20,000 disco hop

NEW YORK (AP) — Margaret Trudeau, whose appearances at New York discos sent photographers racing for their flash bulbs, is reported flying to Tokyo next month to open a disco-restaurant there.

The Daily News says Mrs. Trudeau will be paid $20,000 for three appearances at the Night Story restaurant-disco when she arrives March 3. She only has to dance, The News says, and give no interviews.

However, the estranged wife of Canadian Prime Minister-designate Pierre Trudeau will continue to maintain the low profile she established during her husband's comeback campaign.

Chain letter like wildfire

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A chain letter that costs $100 and promises buyers up to $224,000 in return is spreading like wildfire throughout B.C.

Police say the letter is illegal but authorities appear powerless to stop it.

The letter, containing a list of 12 names, has been circulating for at least a month and has been reported in Nanaimo, Campbell River, Duncan, Powell River, most of Greater Victoria and Vancouver as well as several interior cities.

It has also cropped up on the Prairies, the western U.S. and even Hawaii where it has been purchased by vacationers.

A spokesman at RCMP headquarters in Victoria said most detachments on the Island have known about the letter for some time but no investigation has been launched because no one has complained about the scheme.

Saanich police Insp. Robin Stewart said he's heard rumors of the letter and Det. Ken Horsman of the city police fraud squad said he's received two anonymous calls in the past week from persons inquiring about the legality of the operation.

Neil McDiarmid, associate deputy attorney-general in charge of criminal justice, says the scheme is illegal and a violation of section 189 of the Criminal Code.

The law makes it an offence for anyone to participate in a scheme in which a participant puts up a sum of money in hopes of a bigger return. Such a scheme becomes a quasi-lottery.

Persons convicted could face a prison sentence of up to two years.

But that hasn't deterred gullible people from taking part.

The letter and list cost $100. Half is sent by mail to the person whose name is at the top of the list and the other half is paid directly to the seller.

The buyer scratches out the name at the top, adds his own to the bottom, makes out two copies and sells the new lists for $50 each.

But a mathematician at the University of Victoria says the process is a geometric progession with mind-boggling results.

Each sale doubles the number of lists. By the time the 12th name reaches the top, it would be on 4,496 lists worth $224,800, the amount promised in the letter.

But, he said, the pyramiding effect would continue. If the first person to add his name winds up on 4,496 lists, the second would wind up on 8,992 lists, worth $449,600 and the third person, 17,984 lists worth $899,200.

By the time the 12th person made it to the top — one complete cycle — his name would be on 9,207,808 lists worth $460,390,400.

Provided the chain is not broken, only the first 12 to 14 persons on the list could ever hope to benefit, he said.

But if the chain is broken, then new lists can surface and the cycle can begin anew.

No one knows how much money is being made by person who've signed onto the scheme.

There have been reports of a person in Portland, Ore. receiving $90,000 and a woman in Victoria is said to have amassed $12,000.

A Duncan man who asked not to be named said in an interview he's received $2,000 so far.

The man bought his letter 13 days ago and within six hours had sold it to two friends.

The letter said he shouldn't expect to start getting any money until 12 days later but he said he received his first $50 bill after only three days.

He noted the letter states that "this concept falls within all current laws and has received approval from legal counsel," and accepted the statement at face value.

Horsman said the chain letter is a perennial con game in which only a few ever benefit.

"There are all sorts of fraud scams and this is one of the biggest."

He said a person buying in has no way of knowing whether or not the first 12 names on the list are fictitious.

Gas station, grocery store holdup targets

A city service station and an Esquimalt grocery store were held up Tuesday night.

Victoria police said a tall man armed with a handgun robbed the Humber Green Gulf station at Douglas and Government at 6:24 p.m. and escaped with $200.

Police said the bandit is in his mid-20s with brown eyes and long, dark hair tied in a pony tail. He wore a black and white jacket.

Two hours later a knife-wielding youth robbed AB Grocery, 526 Head, of $100.

Tito feels better but still grave

BELGRADE (AP) — President Tito's doctors said today the 87-year-old Yugoslav leader felt better following a peaceful night's rest, but his actual condition remained grave and without change.

A medical bulletin made no specific mention of the heart or kidney weaknesses which developed after the amputation of Tito's left leg Jan. 20.

Meanwhile, control of the country already has passed into the hands of a collective leadership made up of a nine-man presidency and a 23-member group in charge of the Communist party.

Members of the presidency met Tuesday.

The meeting was presided over by Lazar Kolisevski, the 66-year-old vice-president who would become its president if Tito dies.

Booze ad ban in Territories

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — The Northwest Territories legislature voted Tuesday to ban all liquor advertisements on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s northern radio and television service.

The ban was suggested by Dennis Patterson, a representative of Frobisher Bay who said the CBC broadcast service is virtually the only medium promoting the sale of liquor in eastern Arctic communities.

Most Arctic communities strictly prohibit the sale of alcohol or greatly restrict its use.

advising the politburo at this very moment that only 200,000 more men would enable them to see the light at the end of the tunnel," one Western diplomat commented.

Western intelligence reports estimate that sabotage, sniping, bomb attacks, ambushes and hit-and-run raids by the anti-Communist Moslem guerrillas cost the Soviet army at least 3,000 casualities in the first two months of its Afghanistan intervention, including between 600 and 800 men killed.

The Afghan army, estimated at 100,000 men before the Soviet intervention in late December, is believed to have been cut in half through desertions, purges and guerrilla action. And Soviet-trained Afghan soldiers have shown little enthusiasm for fighting the rebels.

Vance is on a four-nation tour of Western Europe to try to gain support for U.S. Afghan policies. He is also scheduled to go to Rome, Paris and London.

In London, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said Tuesday night that if British athletes go to the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow while Soviet troops are still in Afghanistan it will be seen as condoning an international crime.

In the toughest line she has taken over the Olympics, she asked the British Olympic Association to accept the Conservative government's advice that British athletes should not go to Moscow this summer.

In Moscow, the U.S.-set deadline passed without comment.

The Soviet news media previously charged the U.S. president with attempting to blackmail the Soviet Union and insisted pressure from the United States would not affect Soviet foreign policy objectives. But the Russians never reported the deadline Carter had set — or its link with American participation in the Summer Olympics.

There were persistent rumors in the Afghan capital that the Russians might stage a token withdrawal of a few thousand men, but it did not materialize.

Some Western diplomats here now speculate the Russians and the Soviet-backed Afghan government will not be able to put down a 21-month rebellion by Moslem insurgents without even greater numbers of troops being sent into Afghanistan from the Soviet Union.

McKitka wanted $100,000: ex-MLA

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A former Social Credit MLA told a B.C. Supreme Court jury Tuesday that when he and former Surrey mayor Ed McKitka were discussing a commercial development in the municipality McKitka asked him "What's in it for me?"

Ray Loewen, formerly the MLA for Burnaby-Edmonds, said the conversation occurred in May, 1977, when the two met on the street and stopped to discuss the commercial development Loewen was attempting to build.

Loewen said he tried to make light of McKitka's remark and replied: "I don't mind helping you in your election campaign."

He said McKitka replied: "That's not what I mean. I want $100,000 in my bank account after I leave office."

McKitka, now a Surrey alderman, faces nine criminal charges related to property speculation.

Reincarnation of Laurier?

OTTAWA — He was, when elected, a shining hero, a demigod, or at least a knight sans peur and almost sans reproche.

There was something in this, as in all myths, but not nearly as much as his worshippers supposed and they worshipped him for the least of his achievements, neglecting the greatest. Usually he has been painted larger than life because his stature was inflated.

In intellect and learning he outranked all who came before and after him.

Trudeau?

No, Laurier, as painted in the evocative words of Bruce Hutchison.

That would be the Laurier who, like Trudeau, won four elections: "The man indeed was bigger than his measurable public work. His supreme achievement was himself — a spirit of moral grandeur unique in the Canadian breed."

It's been noted before, but the uncanny parallels between the two prime ministers, three-quarters of a century apart, become even more striking this week on a re-reading of Hutchison's fine book called Mr. Prime Minister.

"By the immeasurable dimensions of character none of our prime ministers could equal the serene, inward nobility of Laurier (Trudeau) . . . his delicate, feminine touch, his mystical power over other men, his personal charisma.

"But he had great faults, too. Laurier-Trudeau "had touches of Machiavelli well obscured by the look of Galahad. He was part saint, part autocrat and part actor. In short, a human being."

Laurier-Trudeau was loved, only this side of idolatry, for his spirit. His weaknesses — none of the flesh — were generally ignored.

All this was written in 1964, before Pierre Trudeau had been heard of by anyone outside Quebec, four years before he vaulted into the prime minister's chair.

Laurier-Trudeau practised politics, often with scant scruple, according to the rules, but he lived alone in his own world and his exquisite manners were used as an invisible boundary which even the closest friend could never cross.

Laurier-Trudeau, "though always the leading figure on any stage and jealous of the spotlight, was a spiritual recluse, an intellectual admirer of Parliament but by inclination a remote orator and executive who usually left the parliamentary routine to his lieutenants."

Our friend Laurier-Trudeau disliked detail and thought best only when he was thinking in broad contour. In delicious irony: "When he attempted to re-organize the Canadian National Railway system he produced a costly botch."

More? "As in no other prime minister, his oratory revealed the man." Laurier-Trudeau's speeches "may not have been bigger than his mind, but they were far bigger than the mind or means of Canada."

"The right word came trippingly to his tongue, in French or English. Uusally extemporaneous, his major speeches seemed to be built by an architect, stone on stone."

Laurier-Trudeau reveled in language as an artist might revel in paint. It was his natural medium. But it depended as much on his pipe-organ voice, his delicious accent, gestures and presence as on his words.

The arrival of Laurier-Trudeau seemed to change everything. In fact, the world was changing and he was borne on a rising tide. His look, of itself, inspired confidence and then reverence.

He had his sorrows, "supportable only by his religion and a private life of ascetic purity."

A strictly classical and literary upbringing produced a deep and abiding scholarship. "Not by the artificial definition of birth but by the sure imprint of nature, "Laurier-Trudeau had become a gentleman, the supreme Canadian gentleman of his time. Beside him, all other politicians were to seem somewhat barbarous."

He edited a paper that antagonized the local priests by its radicalism. He was established as the leader of the moderate Quebec centre, the man who could reconcile the extremes of left and right.

Though a French-Canadian and spokesman of a supposedly conquered race, he had become perhaps the most ardent advocate and interpreter of the British parliamentary system in Canada. Its history, its laws, its lore and inner working fascinated him.

His cabinet appointments "had demonstrated that he was not a gorgeous dilettante, as many friends and enemies supposed, but a man of ruthless will. He intended to be and already was the boss."

More? "The fact that the head of government was never a liberal in 20th-century terms but a pretty conservative Whig of the nineteenth . . . escaped the public on the birthday of the new Liberalism[illegible]

The end of this dual personality? Elected in 1896, a Laurier who had passed three score years and ten in 1911 — "defeated by the dishonesty of political strategists, by the honesty of the average voter and by the age of his government, the old man retired with the dignity expected of him — no bitterness, no excuses, no explanations."

Is this beginning to sound like an old movie?

Non-union help costs $70,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — An Okanagan Valley fencing company has agreed to pay $70,000 into a union's coffers for using non-union employees of two associated companies on union work.

In a rare case before the B.C. Labor Relations Board, Southern Interior Fencing Ltd. of Kelowna, certified by the Ironworkers Union, local 79, agreed to make the payment for having used non-union workers of Lynx Brand Fence Products Ltd. and MJM Steel Ltd. on construction of commercial and industrial fencing.

The union filed complaints with the board which were eventually dismissed when the parties agreed to a consent order by a panel headed by board vice-chairman Jack Moore.

Under this agreement, the non-union companies must stay out of the jurisdiction set out in the Ironworkers collective agreement with Southern Interior.

Southern Interior agreed to stop sub-contracting this work to the other two firms which now are limited to private residential fencing.

The $70,000 is compensation for lost income of the Ironworkers.

Grit gap worry to Volrich

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mayor Jack Volrich is inviting his counterparts in Edmonton, Calgary and Regina to form a regional committee to lobby western Canadian interests in Ottawa. Volrich said Tuesday the Liberal shutout in Monday's federal election leaves a serious gap in communications and relations between Ottawa and Western Canada. There were no Liberals elected west of Manitoba. Volrich said the gap could be closed by regular meetings between the four mayors, prime minister-elect Pierre Trudeau and Ray Perrault, a Liberal senator from B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Gino Cicci, former vice-president of Seneca Developments of Vancouver, was found guilty in county court Tuesday of receiving a secret commission in a Quebec uranium mining deal in 1976. Rescue administration

For several years now the west coast maritime community has, with legimate cause, complained about inadequate search and rescue facilities. But the problem goes even wider, as was learned during the inquest into the deaths of 30 Taiwanese sailors who perished aboard the Lee Wan Zin off B.C.'s north coast.

The equipment and administrative procedures now used to cope with an emergency at sea were also brought into question. The sequence of events before and after the Panamanian freighter loaded with 56,000 tons of iron ore pellets capsized Christmas Day, showed that opportunities existed to improve the situation with present safety regulations and search and rescue facilities.

Before a sailing certificate is issued, ships are inspected to ensure loading complies with Canadian safety regulations. However, Coast Guard officials did not inspect the cargo after it was loaded at Tasu on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The Lee Wang Zin's distress call was picked up by the Rescue Co-ordination Centre in Victoria. However, the centre did not have the book listing the call sign of the vessel. Precious time was lost simply identifying the ship.

It was not until three hours after identification that the first Canadian aircraft, a Coast Guard navigational aids helicopter from Prince Rupert, took off to start the search. The helicopter spotted the overturned vessel an hour later, but no ships were enlisted to join the search until the next day.

The superintendent of the Pacific Pilotage authority testified at the inquest that the pilot boat stationed in Prince Rupert could have withstood the weather and seas in Dixon Entrance and been along side the Lee Wang Zin before dark Christmas day.

At the conclusion of evidence, Coroner Hal Murphy said that throughout the inquest he had been struck by the casual way Canadian officials dealt with the freighter while it was in Canadian waters. And the jury made some recommendations which amounted to doing nothing more than what should have been routine — providing the rescue centre with an up to date list of ships in B.C. waters, having a marine surveyor inspect cargos before ships sail, and improving the co-ordination of rescue operations.

The Canadian Coast Guard commissioner William O'Neil responded by saying steps will be taken to ensure all bulk carriers are properly inspected before sailing and that everything will be done to improve the Coast Guard's search and rescue capability.

That is certainly a good start. But it is worrisome that it might take another major marine disaster before the federal government makes good the inquest jury's main recommendation — that a search and rescue vessel capable of withstanding severe weather conditions be stationed at Prince Rupert.

Scholastic aptitudes

They used to be called IQ tests, but they fell into disrepute in the past decade. Educators complained they were culturally biased, that children's scores on them influenced their future school life unfairly, and that they claimed to measure "intelligence," a value-laden concept that hasn't even been properly defined yet.

Now, however, a University of Victoria education professor is calling for a return to the tests — but not to the aura that once surrounded them.

Dr. Hugh Taylor suggests the tests should not be called "intelligence tests," but rather "scholastic aptitude tests," because what they appear to measure satisfactorily is how well a person will perform in the future in school.

It may well be, he agrees, that these tests don't measure "intelligence" — in part because experts still can't agree on just what abilities should be included in term. What the tests do measure, he says, is "a broad sampling of the things a person has learned since they were born."

Taylor's approach appears to make a lot of sense. He is saying in essence that it doesn't really matter if the tests are culturally biased, because they are culturally biased in exactly the same directions as our school system. It doesn't matter if the tests don't take into account all the abilities that might go to make up "intelligence" because they do take into account the abilities that children need to succeed in the school system.

This may point up some weaknesses in the school system , but it doesn't invalidate the tests as predictors of how pupils will do in that system.

Love that phone call

The coming of the modern communications era — television, telephones, and such — has in the past been blamed for many evils ranging from increased violence to why-Johnny-can't-read.

Now, however, a new woe has been added to the list: the demise of the love letter.

Charles Dalfen, vice-chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC), told a communications symposium recently that "personal letter writings, particularly love letters . . . (have) virtually disappeared with the near-universal use of the telephone."

Dalfen noted, however, that the love letter may yet return in modern technological form. For instance, a phone-a-compliment service has apparently been started recently in New York.

According to Dalfen, "it excludes even the most carefully couched insults."

WALTER STEWART

The image couldn't be fixed

OTTAWA — The election was over before it began.

It was over because Prime Minister Joe Clark, a decent man and a credible politician, came across as a neophyte, a waverer, a wanderer, a wimp.

Politics is a cruel business, the electorate a fickle mistress, and the voters who trooped to the polls nine months ago to throw out the Liberals and give the Clark Conservatives a chance, trooped back to reverse their decision, and throw the Liberals back in.

There was nothing fair about the process, nothing polite about it, but it was irrevocable and now Canadians — and Clark — will have to learn to live with the result.

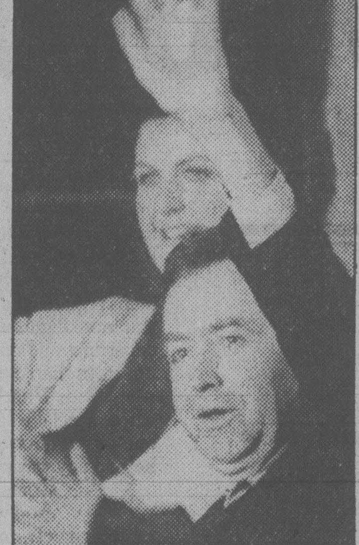
Burnt offering

For Clark at least, the outlook is harrowing. On the record of the Conservatives' treatment of failed leaders in the past, he assumes, the standing of a potential burnt offering. The question that remains is who will apply the match?

There was a time in the first week of the campaign when anyone in the ground floor bar of Vancouver's Bayshore Inn, looking out towards the mountains and the Fraser River, would have known it was all over.

The bar was packed and quiet, until somebody cracked a Joe Clark joke, and within 10 minutes the crowd became a slightly guilty Archie Bunker family, with everyone telling his favorite — sometimes crude, usually just derisive — version of what had by then become a national theme.

Jane McMaster, a cosmestics company representative from Brandon, was one of perhaps a dozen people to say " Listen to it. He sounds like a jerk, looks like a jerk — he's a walking joke to everyone in here, but he's probably a nice guy and he might have been a good prime minister."



JOE CLARK
. . . out with a joke

There may be a crueller phrase in politics than "He's a nice guy, but. . ." There is, however, no phrase more damaging — ask Robert Stanfield.

A politician can survive almost anything — dislike, as Trudeau showed; scandal, as a score of politicians starting with John A. Macdonald proved; internal bickering, as John Diefenbaker indicated (at least for a time).

But not derision.

Once Canadians had put Clark down as a lightweight, as an object of scorn, as the target of their quips, all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put him back together again.

All those hours, all those miles, all those speeches, ads and pamphlets couldn't fix the problem that even Clark knew he faced when he said, long before the campaign was officially over, that if he lost it would be "because of my image."

Clark knew defeat was coming. He never admitted it, perhaps not even to himself, but he knew it. The despair leaked out of him in those gauche, sometimes embarrassing, sometimes touching pleas not to throw him out of office so soon, to give him a chance.

"Trudeau had 11 years," he kept saying, while his government had a bare six months. It didn't seem right, somehow. Had the tactic worked, he would have been the first Canadian political leader to whine his way to power.

Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau knew victory was coming. As the campaign wound down and the polls piled up, all showing substantial Liberal leads, he began to prance, to caper, to mug for the cameras.

"The Shadow" alias he adopted for much of the campaign began to slip, and a familiar figure bobbed out again — the man with the shrug, the man who wears power like a glove.

Strong mandate

Now it is over, and the nation, perhaps a little stunned by what it has done, by the strength of the mandate it has given the Liberals, has gone on its way.

Left behind are the smashed dreams of Joe Clark, the resurrection of Pierre Trudeau, the shocked incredulity of the NDP's Ed Broadbent — who probably ran a better campaign than either of his chief rivals, for all the good it did him.

Jetsam on the sands of time.

And all because the Conservative leader was a man the voters could not take seriously. This was the way his world ended, not with a bang, but a joke.

No justice

The closing of Langwood Workshop for the Mentally Retarded shows a degree of insensivity on the part of the provincial government which would take us back to the Dark Ages. In that benighted era the mentally retarded were hidden away behind locked doors, neglected, starved and beaten by those who should be caring for them.

Today in the sheltered workshops such as Langwood, mentally handicapped adults of any age are taught skills in living, personal care and simple household chores. They share a happy social environment and partake in active sports within their capacity.

But the government would take all this away from them for a paltry sum compared to the amount spent for expensive buildings such as the Vancouver law courts and stadium. Is this their idea of justice? — Marjory D. Narroway, 1390 Esquimalt Road.

No compassion

I was amazed and shocked by an incident portrayed on the 11 o'clock CBC evening news last evening, February 7, in which a broken-hearted Indian wife was being forcibly returned to her native India to await (on the slim chance that she may reach India alive) almost certain death. Our recent boasts that we had to break International Law and protocol for compassion's sake to shelter and bring home our American friends sounds disgustingly hypocritical in the light of such crude behaviour towards this woman.

On the other hand with that alacrity we opened our doors and our arms to a Soviet wife and child deserter who with his paramour jumped ship here in Vancouver.

The aforementioned Indian lady (we were told) came to Canada to join her legal husband only to discover that he had deserted her for another woman and thus rejected his lawful wife. One needs only to have an inkling of Indian social culture and mores to realize how terrible was the chagrin and embarrassment that this poor woman was called on to face. But our compassionate government compounds her embarrassment and shame by making her the villain in the situation and deporting her.

While there yet remains in Canada some vestige of human decency, let us demand of our officials that they be guided by the law, tempered with human compassion and moral decency, rather than acting on purely political expediency in all such proceedings.

Yours for a Canada for which none of us need be ashamed. — Cecil T. Bailey, 3460 Shelbourne Street.

Trivialized

In a recent article in your paper the proceedings of a meeting of the Capital Regional District Board were reported — the matter that concerns us is the issue of appointing a woman to the newly proposed Economic Development Commission. Apparently at the meeting one member of the board made remarks ("quippingly" or not) that can only be described as in bad taste. Another member of the board protested against appointing "token" women — trivializing what we thought was a serious matter.

The issue itself arose from a letter sent to board members from the Women's E[illegible]mmittee, a coalition of groups, individuals and community workers who are collaborating out of a concern for the high rate of unemployment amongst women, low wages and lack of job security. The committee's objective is to improve the dismal situation of women who are in the labor force and of those wishing to enter or re-enter it. Thus we are concerned that the problems women face with respect to employment are erased.

We pointed out to the board that while we are pleased that the District is undertaking efforts to promote economic development generally within the region, we are at the same time concerned that the commission will not have adequate representation and knowledge of the particular problems women face in the economy. We also pointed out that we hoped that women's very special needs would not merely be assumed to disappear only with increased economic activity or that it would not be assumed that women will continue to be satisfied only with traditional work roles. We suggested, therefore, the appointment of at least one well-qualified woman to the commission to act as both an advocate and resource person on behalf of women in the region much in the manner that other appointments were to be representative of other components in the local economy — namely, industry, construction, fisheries, forest products, tourism, small and large business, etc. We also suggested that the commission should at all times consider the impact of its efforts on women and how better to promote a more positive work environment and opportunity for women.

We protest that the issues we raised were not seriously considered. They are serious concerns. We hope that in future the board will be more positive and work concretely towards ensuring satisfactory economic development for all citizens in the region. Let us hope that what happened this time is not repeated. It is of no benefit to anyone. — Diana Butler, Women's Employment Committee.

Paul Minvielle's insightful article on the future of fruit and vegetable growing on Vancouver Island (The Farmland Freeze — Salvation or Sell-Out?, Feb. 1) rates applause. The failure of some supermarket chains to give priority to home-grown products is a sad story, and your reporter tells it well.

The general public appears to recognize the importance of preserving farmland but they do not fully understand the problem from the farm perspective. For the farmer, the marketing and distribution system can often determine his or her ability to hang onto the land for food production purposes.

I am afraid that British Columbians have yet to realize that unless our agricultural industry survives, efforts to preserve farmland are bound to fail. More articles like Mr. Minvielle's might finally convince skeptics that the few cents saved on foreign produce may well end up costing Canadians much more than it will save them. — Don Knoerr, President, B.C. Federation of Agriculture.

Lack of respect

In the editorial section, on page 4, of your edition of Feb. 9 there was a cartoon which read as follows: "Hey, why worry about Afghanistan, oil prices, Iran, the value of your dollar, acid rain, the Canadian Mosaic, beer prices and so on since there isn't one God Damn thing you can do about it anyway."

I was grieved to have your paper take God's name in vain. Natural reasoning should prompt us to have respect for the name of the Sovereign of the universe and of the affairs of the nations of this world. To take God's Name in vain is to disrespect God and dishonour His Name.

Our newspapers have a very real influence on the minds of the people of our land. How wonderful if you, the editors of our papers, would seek to give God a little more respect and recognition. — D. A. Corbett, 3019 George Street, Duncan.

Linguistic unity

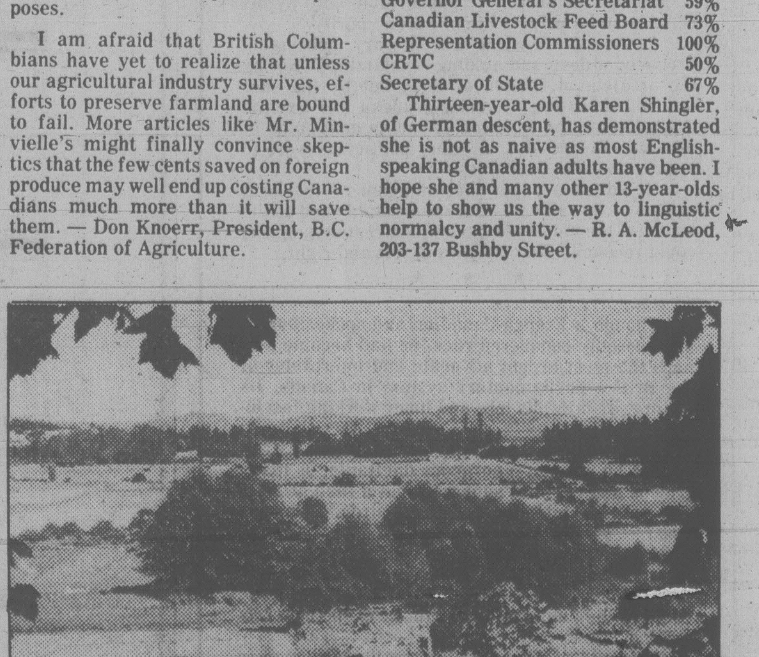
Congratulations to young Karen Shingler's for her letter in the Times concerning mandatory French instruction in B.C. schools. Her reasons for not wanting to take the subject are realistic and sensible. My generation and many others were taught French in English-speaking provincial schools for years, yet the language situation in Canada has steadily deteriorated between the two language groups. French is lost in a sea of English-speaking North Americans.

The present bilingual program in Canada, at a tremendous cost to the country, is benefitting only the French speaking peoples for federal government employment.

Several months ago a computer survey of 270,998 employees in federal institutions for whom the treasury board is the employer was carried out. Keep in mind that French-speaking people make up less than 25 per cent of the population of Canada. Here are the statistics with respect to those employees whose mother tongue is French.

Canadian Dairy Commission	58%
Office of Chief Electoral Officer	80%
Canadian Inter-Governmental Conference Secretariat	72%
Canadian Labor Relations Board	56%
Commiss. of Official Languages	81%
Governor General's Secretariat	59%
Canadian Livestock Feed Board	73%
Representation Commissioners	100%
CRTC	50%
Secretary of State	67%

Thirteen-year-old Karen Shingler, of German descent, has demonstrated she is not as naive as most English-speaking Canadian adults have been. I hope she and many other 13-year-olds help to show us the way to linguistic normalcy and unity. — R. A. McLeod, 203-137 Bushby Street.



The means to preserve farmland is in the marketplace, says reader.

Pierre to bow out in two years? Just don't bet your bottom buck

By WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

OTTAWA — It is now possible to make a guess as to when Pierre Trudeau will gracefully relinquish leadership of the Liberal party.

Approximately when hell freezes over.

The accepted sequence of events — the scenario, as the lads around the West Block cafeteria call it — is that, now that he has been vindicated by the electorate, and the lousy taste of his May, 1979, loss has been washed away, the once-and-future prime minister will devote himself to securing a peaceful succession. Within two years, or three, certainly before another election looms, he will announce his impending retirement again and step aside, with a modest bow, while the party machinery cranks up for another leadership convention.

Maybe, maybe not.

It is just possible that Donald Macdonald, the putative bride-to-be, may wind up with the grimiest trousseau since Great Expectations.

The step-aside scenario is based on five assumptions about Trudeau that he means what he says; that he doesn't change his mind; that he doesn't enjoy being prime minister and would rather do something else; that his only concern now is for his place in history, and that he wants to spend more time with his children.

There is no evidence to support the first three of these assumptions; if anything, the record shows the contrary in each case. There is evidence, both in his own behavior and in the statements of those who know him, that the last two assumptions are correct, but they may be offset.

From the day he entered Liberal politics — as opposed to his earlier, left-wing phase — Trudeau has shown a genuine, deep-seated concern over two paramount issues, which are joined. In the first place, he has always wanted to see the Canadian constitution brought to Ottawa — patriated, in the jargon — and attached to that constitution, he has always wanted to see a legislated Bill of Rights. Not the poor, pale thing John Diefenbaker passed into law, a bill that faints in the presence of any other statute, but a constitutional provision, robust and dependable. The word he always uses to describe its enactment is that it should be "enshrined" in the constitution, and the choice of that word is significant.

There is not going to be a Canadian-based constitution soon, and there will be no enshrinement ceremony in the near future, and if Trudeau is as concerned about his place in history as his friends and colleagues suggest, he is unlikely to talk away while he still has the power to change all that.

The Liberal leader disagrees firmly and flatly, if privately, with Claude Ryan, the Liberal leader in his native province of Quebec. Trudeau aides indicate that he is going to keep his peace on the subject of Canada's, and Quebec's, future until after the provincial referendum on sovereignty-association, and perhaps even until after the next provincial election, which need not take place until the fall of 1981.

But if he thinks Ryan is running away with the issue, if he foresees the acceptance of the Ryan proposals, which suggest a much greater degree of provincial autonomy than Trudeau has ever been able to tolerate, much less support, then all bets are off.

For Trudeau to walk away leaving Ryan in charge of the central issue of Canadian unity from a Quebec Liberal's point of view would be like asking a 10-year-old to guard his ice-cream cone.

A lot of harsh things have been said about Trudeau, but no one has ever called him a sucker.

If he wants to safeguard — as he sees it — the federalist approach in Canadian politics, he is going to have to fight his ideas through yet more federal-provincial conferences, and the only question is whether his weariness with that process is greater than his anxiety to secure his own place in history on the issue. Only Trudeau knows the answer to that one, but if he really wanted to retire despite his evident passion in this regard, he missed a marvellous opportunity last November.

He gave as a major reason for his retirement the fact that he was no longer the right man to lead the unity campaign. The voters seem to have suggested that he is.

Similarly, there is no sign that anyone else in the Liberal inner circle feels as strongly as Trudeau does — or did, he is a changeable man — about a constitutional bill of rights, or would, or could, do much about it.

If history is what he has on his mind, Trudeau will be with us for some time to come.

As to his children, certainly it is clear to anyone who watches the man around them that they are important — precious is not too strong a word — to him, and that he is aware of the difficulties of trying to raise them while holding the job of prime minister.

Again, however, he may decide that other matters must come first. That is what he decided the last time his family was weighed in the balance. He said that he would resign if he thought his family relationship would be threatened by staying on, but that is not what he did when it was.

In addition, as he showed towards the end of his last stint in office, he can make more time for family life and still run his office. It is not a perfect arrangement in either quarter, but it serves.

Trudeau likes being prime minister. He thinks he does it better than anyone else available. He has a number of things yet to do in office, and they are going to take time.

It may be that, despite all these considerations, he will, when the time comes, quietly step aside and hand the torch to someone else.

It may be, too, that if you put a pyramid under your bedsprings, it will improve your sex life.

Don't count on it.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., — A nuclear war would have no winners and would cause far greater devastation than most North Americans realize, probably destroying all civilization.

This vision, described with scientific fact and with passion, dominated a two-day conference here called by doctors who believe the world has tolerated the danger of nuclear weapons too long.

"We, as physicians, have accepted the arms race as something inevitable," said Dr. Herbert Abrams, chairman of the Harvard Medical School radiology department. "The real enemy is passivity."

"The conditions are not unthinkable. Rather, they are infrequently thought about," said Dr. Howard Hiatt, the dean of Harvard's School of Public Health. "Not to make the effort (to eliminate nuclear arms) would be an insupportable betrayal to ourselves and our children."

Doctors here, despairing of treating the overwhelming casualties of a nuclear war, spoke of last weekend's conference as the beginning of a new effort to arouse American opposition to nuclear weapons.

In scenario after scenario, the doctors and other scientists outlined the immediate and long-term effects of a nuclear war. A 20-megaton attack on Boston would cause total destruction inside a circle with a radius of 6 kilometres. Not a single building would be left standing, scientists said.

Within 10 kilometres of the blast, only the strongest reinforced concrete buildings would survive.

At least 2.2 million people would be killed by the bomb and the subsequent firestorm, Hiatt said. Medical services would be crippled and it is likely that most of those not killed quickly would eventually become casualties.

Survivors would be in a race to erect a life support system before available food and other supplies ran out, MIT physicist Henry Kendall said.

"It is likely that the race would be lost," he added.

Kendall predicted that the world would be likely to return to the level of the Middle Ages, with scattered bands of people competing for scarce resources.

Each one-megaton bomb can devastate a 60-square kilometre area, Kendall said. He added that in a scenario for an attack of the United States, using only a small fraction of the Soviet nuclear arsenal, New York City would be likely to get hit not by one bomb but 65.

The 650 doctors, nurses, medical students and others who attended the weekend symposium heard over and over that to plan civil defence measures or draw up blueprints for post-nuclear services is madness.

Using evidence from the Second World War coventional firestorm that destroyed Dresden, speakers argued that bomb shelters would become ovens and pressure cookers.

At the conclusion of the symposium the group of anti-nuclear doctors that oragnized the discussion, Physicians for Social Responsibility, sent a telegram to President Carter and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev expressing alarm at "an international political climate that increasingly presents nuclear war as a rational possiblity."

Ribs, sauerkraut appropriate for viewing Carter conference

NEW YORK — That was a very appropriate news conference the president conducted the other night. It was carried on television, which was appropriate. "How appropriate that the president should hold a televised news conference just at dinnertime," I said to my dinner companion as we tucked into the ribs and sauerkraut.

"It would also have been appropriate if he had confined himself to radio," she observed with her usual keen insight. She had me there, and it seemed appropriate to tell her so.

"You're dead right," I said, "just as you are dead right about serving ribs and sauerkraut with the news conference. It is an appropriate dish."

The president opened with remarks about the Iranian problem. He said "an appropriate commission," if established, might help settle the matter.

"What is the distinction between an appropriate commission and an inappropriate commission?" my dinner partner asked.

"Tush, woman," said I. "Everyone knows that an appropriate commission is appropriate whereas an inappropriate commission is entirely in-appropriate."

"Your smug tone is uncalled for," she said.

"Exactly," I said. "And that is precisely what an inappropriate commission is: uncalled for."

"How can you have an uncalled-for commission?" she asked. "Commissions don't just materialize out of air; they have to be called for."

Fortunately, the president was coping with an awkward question about American policy toward Iran in 1953. "I don't think it's appropriate or helpful for me to go into something that happened 30 years ago," he said.

"Would some more sauerkraut be appropriate?" asked my companion.

"Not at this time," I replied, for the president was being asked if he endorsed certain harsh comments made by his associates against Senator Kennedy.

"Well," said the president, "the statement that was made today by the secretary of state and by others in answer to Senator Kennedy's speech last night and his previous statements, I think, were appropriate."

"Do you think the president's grammar is appropriate?" my dinner partner asked.

"Considering that he is dealing with the American press," I said, after appropriate reflection, "I believe his grammar are as appropriate as the responses he has made to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan."

"Come now," my companion replied, "even the president hasn't claimed that those responses were appropriate."

"He will in a moment," I replied, whereupon, on being asked if he could deal with the Afghanistan problem and the new Soviet bellicosity without resort to nuclear war, the president replied: "The reaction that I have taken to these steps are appropriate."

"All very well," said my companion, "but is there enough money in the military budget to get the job done?"

"In my opinion," replied the president, "the military budget that we have presented to the Congress in recent weeks is the appropriate level of expenditures."

That made me feel so contented that I called for more ribs, easy on the sauerkraut. "It's good to have an appropriate president again," I said. "You just know that everything is going to come out appropriately in the end."

"You dropped that greasy rib in your lap," my companion replied.

"The lap is the appropriate level of rib-grease descent," I explained.

"If you mean it's cheaper to buy new pants than a new rug," she replied, "I'll say 'Appropriate!' to that."

"Remember the old days with President Ford?" I asked. "Everything was always inappropriate. If you asked him whether everything was going to come out all right in the end, all he said was, 'It is inappropriate to comment on that at this time.' When you asked, 'Do you believe in throwing out the baby with the bath water?' he'd say, 'It would be inappropriate right now to discuss matters under litigation.'"

"I liked the inappropriate Ford," said my companion. "He didn't urge people to register for the draft by telling them there wasn't going to be any draft. He knew that was inappropriate, like telling the cook to put the pot on the fire because you don't intend to have dinner."

Analogies between the draft and cooking were not appropriate, I observed with appropriate iciness. Coolness flowed over the sauerkraut between us. We concentrated on the president. Someone was asking if, after the American embassy prisoners were released by Iran, he would debate Senator Kennedy.

"Whether or not or when a debate would be appropriate would have to be decided in the future," the president said.

"He means," said my companion, "at an appropriate time."

RRSP buyers spurn market

TORONTO (CP) — Buyers of registered retirement savings plans are putting their money into fixed-income plans instead of the surging but more uncertain stock market, executives with large trust companies say.

Despite a stock market flurry that pushed the Toronto Stock Exchange composite index of 300 shares up more than 10 per cent since the beginning of the year, plan buyers are preferring the security of a fixed period.

The most popular investment is the five-year, 11.5-per-cent guaranteed investment certificate.

A spokesman for National Trust Co. Ltd. of Toronto says the higher prices for the equity savings are discouraging some buyers.

The value of a unit in the company's equity fund had increased to $16.90 at the end of January from $13.78 last July.

CanWest sign deal for NYC pay TV

WINNIPEG (CP) — CanWest Capital Corp. of Winnipeg is a proud parent these days. One of its subsidiaries has just signed a deal that will give it access to the entire over-the-air pay TV market of New York City.

CanWest chairman L. H. Asper said the recent merger of his company, Universal Subscription Television Inc., and Wometco Home Theatre Inc. of New Jersey will make USTV one of the leading over-the-air pay TV companies in the United States.

The joint company will start out with about 80,000 subscribers and a capital base of $20 million, including two television stations.

Asper will be chairman of the new company, which will be called Wometco Home Theatre.

He noted that pay TV, which offers first-run movies, sporting events and other specials for a monthly fee, is still in its infancy — but it's growing. Even now, he said, there about six million homes in the U.S. receiving the service

CanWest started USTV in 1978 to gain access to the U.S. market.

Asper said it now has $20 million invested in the pay television industry and is gaining "valuable experience which may one day be used in Canada."

Rate hike not automatic

MONTREAL (CP) — Gerald Bouey, governor of the Bank of Canada, says there's a "bit of mythology" about reaction here to changes in interest rates in the United States.

"We make our own decisions," he says.

Bouey said in an interview published today that rising interest rates in the U.S. don't necessarily mean Canada is in for the same thing.

"I'd like to stress there's nothing automatic about following American increases," he said. "If you look back, sometimes we follow; sometimes we don't.

"Sometimes," he said, "we do something different."

Bouey added that the Bank of Canada watches such things as inflation, the state of financial markets and the international value of the dollar in making its decisions.

"You'll note that the Canadian dollar is quite strong," he said.

The dollar closed in New York Tuesday at 86.41 cents U.S. — up .38 from Monday. Some analysts attributed the rise to the outcome of the Canadian election, with the Liberals gaining enough seats to form a majority government.

As for the effect of the election on the Bank of Canada, Bouey said the Liberal victory would not deter him from raising the interest rate here if he felt it were necessary.

At present, the Bank of Canada quotes 14 per cent. The U.S. Federal Reserve Board raised its rate Monday to 13 per cent — up one per cent. Some leading U.S. banks followed Tuesday with an increase in their prime lending rates of half a point to 15.75. The prime rate at commercial banks in Canada is 15 per cent.

CDC reports 221% net income increase

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada Development Corp. reported Tuesday a 211-per-cent increase in net income for the fiscal year ended Dec. 31.

The unaudited results showed net income totalled a record $113 million or $3.08 a share on consolidated revenues of $2 billion, compared with income of $36.4 million or 62 cents a share in 1978 on consolidated revenues of $1.3 billion.

The company said significant increases in both earnings and revenues reflect strong performances throughout the year by companies in the petrochemical and mining groups.

Bank of Montreal boosts mortgage interest rates

MONTREAL (CP) — The Bank of Montreal announced Tuesday that it is increasing interest rates on mortgages, registered retirement savings plans and investment certificates.

The mortgage increases, effective immediately, include boosts for the National Housing Act five-year and three-year closed rates to 14 per cent from 13¼ and 13½ per cent respectively. The NHA three-year open and one-year closed rates remain unchanged at 14¾ and 14 per cent.

The bank has also raised conventional five-year and three-year closed mortgage rates to 14 from 13¼ and 13½, while conventional three-year open and one-year closed rates are unchanged at 14¾ and 14 per cent.

The one-year rate for RRSPs is up to 12¼ from 12, while the 2-6 year rates are up to 11¾ from 11¼, also effective immediately.

In other news, the Mercantile Bank of Canada has announced its U.S. prime lending rate is rising to 16 per cent from 15.5 per cent effective today.

The U.S. prime rate is the rate at which U.S. funds are loaned to top corporate clients.

Library board expense account attacked

Saanich Ald. Edgar Farthing, a member of the Vancouver Island Regional Library board, wants changes in the way the board runs up bills and then decides how to pay them.

Farthing used a recent board meeting in Qualicum as an example of practises he would like to see altered.

He said board members were treated to paid travel, hotel, meal and bar expenses and at the end each received a copy of Doris Shadbolt's book on the art of Emily Carr priced at $45.

Shadbolt was feature speaker at the meeting.

Farthing said the bill for the meeting of 18 delegates from around the Island was picked up by the library board as a regular part of its annual budget.

"It's not the actual cost of that weekend meeting I object to," he said.

"Rather it's the principle that in effect the board sets its own expense allowance."

Farthing said he would prefer to see each municipal council which sends a representative pay its own member's expenses.

Municipal councils foot the bill in the end because they fund the library board, he said, so it's only reasonable that they have as much control as possible.

The next board meeting is in Port McNeill, he said, and municipal councils should be able to individually decide whether they want to pay for their members to travel all that way for the meeting.

"It's the war cry of the elected official that he can't halt the growing costs of government. Well starting at this level is one way of overcoming that," he said.

Farthing also questions the method the board uses to collect its funds.

At present, it charges each municipality according to its total assessment value.

But Farthing said this results in inequities like that seen now in North Saanich which shares a library with Sidney.

The library is in Sidney, which has a larger population than North Saanich, but North Saanich pays more for the service than the town.

Sidney pays about $41,000 while North Saanich pays about $53,000.

Neighboring Central Saanich which has its own library pays about $67,000.

Farthing would like to see costs based on population rather than assessment value.

Earle Tabor, chairman of the library board and a Central Saanich alderman, said he has no complaints with the way the board is run.

He said it is efficient considering the high cost of salaries.

Tabor said the board's 1980 budget was $1,765,782.

Salaries account for about $1,447,000, books about $146,000 (not counting a provincial grant of about $350,000) and board expenses of about $12,000.

Nielsen studies wider rental controls

The minister responsible for the Rent Review Commission is considering amending legislation to extend the rentalsman's umbrella to a large number of previously unprotected houses and apartments.

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen said today an amendment is being studied by legal counsel.

If necessary, it likely will be brought in during the comming session of the legislature.

At present, units built after 1974 are exempt from the annual seven per cent rent increase limit imposed by the government.

These amount to an estimated 20 per cent of B.C.'s rental accomodation. The other 80 per cent can appeal illegal increases to the commission.

Nielsen said if the law is amended to include the 20 per cent, these units would not be subject to the seven per cent limit.

However the tenants would be able to have their complaints mediated by the commission.

"We feel it would be proper to have the opportunity to review those increases," the minister said.

However, he added, any changes in the law must be fair to the landlords too.

The idea of extending the powers of the commission does not sit well with Nielsen.

"The long term objective must be to decontrol," he said.

"Government interference by way of rent controls in the long term creates chaos."

However, he said, in the short term, the government must interfere "because the marketplace has been interferred with previously.

"It's an action and reaction situation."

Nielsen said no action by the provincial government or the commission will cure B.C.'s shortage of rental accomodation.

William Head escapers may have drowned

Hope has all but vanished that two William Head inmates who have been missing since Monday will be found alive.

A search Tuesday by RCMP and prison officials along the shoreline off Rocky Point and Bentinck Island failed to come up with any sign of David William Stevenson, 23, or Samuel Sidney El Safadi, 19.

Prison officials believe the pair might have tried to swim to freedom crossing Pedder Bay in the moonlight to Rocky Point on the other side. However, the tide was running in the opposite direction to where they would have headed.

Shoreline searches will be made again today.

The Matchmakers: jobs for the young

By PAT DUFOUR

Jim was a dropout. Jobs were hard to find.

His skills were few but tinkering with cars was his hobby.

Last year he found a job through the Provincial Youth Employment Program.

Field co-oordinator Brian Gardiner said his organization "matched up" Jim — not his real name — with an employer who makes racing cars from scratch.

Today he's permanently employed, making racing cars and racing them on the side. His employer is now thinking about getting into the business of specialized vehicles, such as bullet-proof limousines.

Thanks to a hobby, and the job program, Jim's on his way.

Jane was different. She had skills, having graduated from Ottawa's Carleton University journalism program. But she couldn't find a job.

Through the same program she was placed with a community newspaper, and then was hired full-time.

In 1979 a total of $1,674,677 was allocated to the program in this area and 1,522 jobs were created for people between 15 and 24.

Gardiner and fellow field co-ordinator Pam Cambell are now busy lining up jobs for the coming season and have already received about 50 applications from employers wanting to participate.

The program provides wage subsidies to employers who hire a youth or student. Farms and businesses who have been in existence for one year and can provide a minimum of two months full-time employment can apply for reimbursement up to $2.50 an hour per employee.

This will be the first year that applications can be received year round.

Non-profit organizations can receive up to $3.40 per hour per employee. Deadline for applications is March 3.

Project expenses, such as money to buy a typewriter, also are available.

Before coming here, Gardiner was a field co-ordinator in the Nanaimo area. He tells how a small monastery near Duncan was helped by the program.

In order to support themselves the monks do drywalling. They wanted to teach the trade to a youth who had been in a bit of trouble. Such a youth was found and the job was set.

Most contracts are for two to four months but extensions to eight months are made when the employer can almost guarantee the on-the-job training will lead to permanent employment. Gardiner says there were 110 extensions in 1979 and 90 per cent led to permanent jobs.

Gardiner and Campbell say the decision to allow applications for the farm and business programs to continue year-round means funds will be better utilized. In the past, allocated funds have been wasted when companies went out of business or started programs later than planned. Now, such funds can be fed back into the system.

In the Youth Employment office at 808 Douglas there is a computer system which is used for a referral service. But this is mainly used for finding jobs with the provincial government.

Campbell says the young people are taught how to make out resumes, advised on local job opportunities and counselled on the jobs they seek.

This year's allocation of funds has not been set but Gardiner estimates it will be about the same as last year when more than 1,500 jobs were found.

Meanwhile, he and Campbell are visiting potential employers and talking to such groups as Chambers of Commerce and the United Way in preparation for the task ahead.

Employers who are interested in taking part in the program can learn more about it by phoning the office at 387-1131.

TOWN TALK

The Forty Thieves disco at the Century Inn was booked as the Rhino party headquarters on election night but it was fairly sedate, attracting mostly young disco dancers.

Tusked candidate Bob Maddocks, who got a surprising 551 votes in Esquimalt-Saanich, was there for a while, still snapping off one-liners.

He budgeted one and a half cents per voter for his campaign, he said, because he didn't think they were worth the proverbial two cents.

He expressed his thanks to the voters with an ad in the classifieds Tuesday: "To those who voted for me more than once, double thanks."

But seriously, folks, the bartender seemed to sum up the election in a couple of lines:

"You've got nobody to bitch to now when gas goes up. Tough, you got a majority."

Maddocks' manager Al Coccola is slightly peeved at the press for ignoring the credible showing the party made nation-wide.

Rhinos racked up 108,000 votes, several thousand more than the failing Social Credit party but no one in the media took note.

They beat 30 Socreds, mostly in Quebec, and several New Democrats and Tories. One last-minute Socred in Alberta got only eight votes, Coccola says, well behind the Rhino.

But the television election computers just lumped the Rhinos in with "other."

"It really bugs me," he says.

And another Rhino weighs in with his post-election analysis.

Louis (Crowbird) Lesosky says regardless of the outcome he's happy to represent all the people of "Malahat-Cow-and the Islands."

He's going to fulfil some of his promises straight away.

"The Rhino government is not going to collect any taxes this year, nor will we be giving any income tax returns."

But he said he'll have to break the promise to issue credit cards to old age pensioners.

"Our printers are too busy printing three dollar bills."

Crowbird also promises to create unemployment at the dumps by establishing drop-off points for all reuseable garbage all over the riding. Anyone want a "rhino dump" in their back yard?

Don't call us, see Crowbird. Box 765 in Ganges, 653-4647.

Former Liberal MP for Esquimalt-Saanich, David Anderson was the French connection in federal election coverage.

Anderson is now a lecturer in the University of Victoria school of public administration, but served time prior to his political career in the external affairs department and speaks a pretty fair game of French.

With that kind of background the Montreal-based CBC French network tabbed him to be their Western Canadian pundit during Monday night election commentary, flying him to Ottawa last Friday afternoon.

As our source commented: "His French is better than Jean Chretien's English."

Pierre Trudeau's back as PM and Victoria impersonator-mimic Steve Ivings might make a buck or two out of Pierre's rebirth.

Ivings had two satirical records — one commenting on a Trudeau election win, the other on Joe Clark in the event he should get back in — ready for release.

So now you'll hear Ivings, in a Trudeauish sounding voice, uttering lines like: "Ha, Ha, I won, I get another crack, I may have lost my hair, but I got my country back."

Ivings' effort will be released generally in a couple of weeks.

New Democrat Bob Cameron, who did well in Esquimalt-Saanich, was a little worse for wear on election night. The whole family had the flu at one point both family cars conked out during the campaign.

"But politically it went well," he told party workers.

It may have contributed to the sharp drop in votes for Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro.

The weekend open house at the Trident Aircraft hangar attracted 3,500 people in just five hours on Saturday.

Derrick Young, the company's manager of production control, said the building was jammed all afternoon and Trident ran out of coffee and doughnuts several times.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Dagger of Sidney won the door prize, a flight around Victoria and the Gulf Islands, unfortunately not in one of the company's Trigulls — federal regulations prohibit it.

Young Pamela Coward won an autographed picture of Trigull, signed by test pilot Jerry Westfall who took the amphibian up to a new unofficial record altitude last fall.

The provincial government's Central Microfilm Service has hit an unexpected bonanza.

It is recovering spent silver from film processing operations and expects to bring in about $28,000 this year as a result.

In previous years, the silver bromide in the film emulsion was discarded. An electrolysis silver recovery unit was installed this year for environmental reasons.

The silver price boom brought the unexpected dividend. In the last two months, the service has recovered two pounds, six ounces of silver, more than enough to pay for the recovery unit.

The price of silver is now about $40 Canadian per troy ounce.

A more mundane item than a billboard might be hard to find but even they can fetch many times their original value.

The large wooden board at Tillicum and Burnside — for more than 20 years a front gate landmark of the drive-in theatre — was removed by crane and flatbed truck this week.

Attica Historic Home Supplies engineered the deal for the 40-foot showboard and its collection of king-size letters.

The next time you see it will be at Painter's Lodge in Campbell River, at a cost to the lodge of around $1,000.

Back in the 50s there might have been $200 worth of materials in it.

Racquet club sold to Vancouver firm

The Racquet Club of Victoria has been sold to a Vancouver firm but will remain as a private recreation facility.

Shareholders Tuesday night voted 80 per cent to approve its sale to brothers Mark and Terry Grimwood of Grimwood & Co. The firm has a Victoria office.

Mark Grimwood said here today the takeover probably will be in March.

Under terms of the sale, the members have a buy-back option if the club isn't successful.

A $600,000 renovation and expansion project will begin immediately, Grimwood said.

Membership fees will stay the same for two years and present members have a 30-day option to join the new club without payment of a $200 initiation fee which takes effect after that time.

The Grimwoods own two private squash-racquetball clubs in Greater Vancouver.

Improvements to the Victoria club will include a new entrance, expanded lounge facility and addition of four or five racquetball courts and the same number of international squash courts.

All the improvements should be completed by the fall, Grimwood said.

Racquet Club of Victoria Holdings Ltd. president Don Francis said shareholders picked the Grimwood proposal because the brothers have an excellent record in the recreation business and a proven management ability.

"They're willing to gamble to turn the club into a viable enterprise," he said.

The Grimwoods will pay $5,000 for the assets of the 7.5-acre facility at 3964 Gordon Head Road and assume all debts, estimated at $900,000.

About 600 of the 1,500 club shareholders voted during the special meeting Tuesday.

The Grimwood offer was one of three proposals submitted.

Thirty club members made an unsuccessful bid to purchase the facility in an offer similar to the Grimwoods but with a much smaller renovation program.

The third offer under consideration was from Saanich, which proposed to assume the debts and turn it into a public recreation centre.

Commitment in writing asked on Trident funds

The Trident issue was in a holding pattern today with the B.C. Development Corp. waiting for written confirmation from the new Liberal government that federal funding will be restored.

BCDC president Newell Morrison wants to get the commitment in writing before the BCDC fulfils its promise to provide interim financing for the Sidney company.

He has a telegram from Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau pledging the original $4 million in loan guarantees — if the Grits won the election — "but you can't take it to the bank and I'm a banker."

Morrison said in an interview he anticipated no difficulty in getting the money to Trident. It's just a matter of someone in the civil service taking the initiative and telling the provincial Crown corporation to go ahead and provide interim money.

"We have to be absolutely sure we're going to be reimbursed," Morrison said.

Defeated Liberal candidate Gerry Kristianson, who obtained Trudeau's word on Trident last week, wondered what more BCDC could want.

"I'm a bit surprised," he said. "If you can't trust the written word of the prime minister in a telegram, the original of which BCDC has . . ."

The candidate repeated the key paragraph of Trudeau's wire to him last Thursday:

"If we are successful Feb. 18 we shall fulfil our previous commitment and, beyond that, we will work with all parties concerned to ensure that Trident is a success."

Kristianson pointed out on election night that the promise did not hinge upon his winning in Esquimalt-Saanich. He came third, behind the NDP's Bob Cameron and veteran MP Donald Munro.

'If he wants to do it all . . .'

Ald. Sandy Noel of Saanich said today Mayor Mel Couvelier's decision to single-handedly change the structure of the municipal council smacks of autocracy.

"He'll lose the co-operation of council if he comes out as a dictator," said Noel, who gave Couvelier a Nazi salute during a Tuesday night council meeting.

The mayor told council he has the power to change the system and will restructure council any way he wants.

A 45-minute debate on streamlining the system ended with Couvelier announcing he will install a new council system for a trial two months.

Couvelier believes the system will become more efficient by eliminating committees and setting up one standing committee with himself as chairman.

Committee business would be done after weekly council meetings.

"If he wants to do that he doesn't need a council really," Noel said today.

"If he wants to do it all that's fine — I'll go play golf."

Although he is opposed to the management-type system, Noel said he isn't worried because Couvelier has always been fair and competent.

Other aldermen don't agree with Couvelier's plan to eliminate the committee system.

"Public input will be sacrificed on the altar of efficiency," Ald. Irene Block said during the Monday meeting.

But Couvelier said it is too late for council to go back to the old system.

"I find it ridiculous and unbelievable at this stage of the game to say you want to change your minds and go back the way we were," Couvelier said.

Discussions on ways to improve the system began more than six months ago when Couvelier suggested abolishing committees because they are time consuming.

A lot of committee business can be handled by municipal staff, he suggested.

Council recently agreed to give municipal clerk Bob Sharp more authority and to add extra staff to handle increased workload any proposed streamlining would create.

"We've changed our philosophy of management, we can't go back now," Couvelier said.

Council needs one standing committee to deal with any subject, said Couvelier, adding that as mayor he has power to make changes without asking for council approval.

Ald. Ed Lum told council it is the mayor's prerogative to give change a chance.

Block said her suggestion to keep committee chairmen isn't an attempt to erode the mayor's authority.

She said retaining separate committees would be less confusing for the public who otherwise would have to sit through an entire meeting waiting for their item to come up.

It would give people a chance to have direct contact with aldermen at the committee level, she said.

Couvelier said he will have more discussions with staff before developing the new council structure.

Hungarian skaters first with fans as Russian pair awarded the gold

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (CP) — Gold medallists usually are received with warm enthusiasm at the Winter Olympics, except in the sport of figure skating, in which the judging sometimes produces an unpopular winner.

The ice dancing competition Tuesday night proved to more of a political battle than a sports contest and, for many of the 8,500 fans, the result left a bitter taste.

The gold medal went to two-time world champions Natalia Linichuk and Gennadi Karponosov of the Soviet Union, an announcement greeted by much booing at the Olympic Auditorium because the fans had become enchanted with the Hungarian couple of Krisztina Regoczy and Andras Sallay.

The Hungarians took the silver medal, but most felt it should have been gold because their four-minute free dance routine was vastly superior to that of the Russians. Linichuk even stumbled badly once during the routine, something which rarely happens to Soviet skaters.

"It was very, very strange for the Russians to trip," said Lorna Wighton of Toronto, who with partner John Dowding of Oakville, Ont., finished sixth. "It did leave room the for the Hungarians to skate well, which they did."

The Hungarians are a much more personable couple on the ice and first captured the fancy of the crowd, which paid $67.20 a ticket, during the original set pattern Sunday. During the free dance they continued to sell their moving act to the crowd.

The Russians barely won the event, mainly on the basis of the lead they built up during the three compulsory dances. Linichuk and Karponosov finished with 13 ordinal places and 205.48 points, while Regoczy and Sallay had 14 and 204.52.

Another Russian couple, Irina Moiseeva and Andri Minekov, took the bronze with 27 ordinals and 201.86 points. Wighton and Dowding, ranked sixth in the world, got 54 ordinals and 193.80 points.

The marking of two judges — Igor Kabanov of Russia and Dr. Suzanne Morrow Francis of Toronto — likely was the difference between the top two teams. Kabanov marked both Russian couples ahead of the Hungarians, while Francis also had the Linichuk-Karponosov combination ahead of the Hungarians by a 10th of a point for artistic impression.

Six of the other judges had Regoczy and Sallay ahead and a seventh gave the same marks to both couples.

The Russians skated their free dance section stolidly and at times almost appeared to fall behind their music.Meanwhile, the Hungarians performed romantically with an upbeat program.

The free dance is worth 50 per cent of the overall mark, with 30 per cent going to the compulsory dances and 20 per cent to the original set pattern.

In speed skating, Gaetan Boucher, who won a silver medal for Canada in the 1,000 metres behind Eric Heiden of the U.S., gets another shot at Heiden Thursday in the 1,500 metres as the Wisconsin skater goes for an unprecedented fourth gold. He viewed his prospects realistically:

"I don't think anyone will beat Heiden because he's so strong and confident right now. I do have the second-fastest time in the world this year at 1,500, though, so I could surprise a lot of people the way I feel now."

"I'd like to see him skate a few more years because I'd like to beat him,".

In other events, Swedish skier Ingemar Stenmark finally proved to an Olympic audience that he is king of the hill as he won the giant slalom, and East Germany claimed gold medals in the luge doubles, 10-kilometre biathlon and nordic combined.

Ulrich Wehling, 27, an East German physical education instructor, won his third consecutive Nordic combined skiing title, piling up a big enough margin in the jumping phae of the competition to survive a ninth-place finish in the cross-country.

East German Frank Ulrich, whose erratic shooting cost him a gold medal in Saturday's 20-kilometre biathlon, shot no better but skied a little faster to win the 10-kilometre event.

East German figure skater Jan Hoffman, leader after the compulsory figures, was still ahead at the completion of the short program in the men's singles but Robin Cousins of Britain, the favorite, was close behind and expected to move ahead when the competition ends with the free skating Thursday night.

Leafs draw first blood from trade

Times News Services

Punch Imlach has said all along he's not interested in affection from his Toronto Maple Leafs — just points.

There was little love for the team's general manager Monday when he announced he'd traded away crowd-pleaser Dave Williams. But there were more points to add to the Leafs' win column Tuesday night and Imlach was smiling.

His two latest acquisitions — Rick Vaive and Bill Derlago came over from Vancouver Canucks for Williams and Jerry Butler — wasted little time producing.

Vaive had two goals and Derlago two assists as the Leafs defeated New York Islanders 6-4 for their third win in four nights.

In Vancouver, the Canucks, with Williams and Butler in the lineup, lost to St. Louis 3-1.

"We still have a lot of holes to fill," said Imlach, happy with the win but still displeased with his starting lineup despite a multitude of recent player changes.

"We've been floundering, but now we'll see what kind of club we have. Yeah, you worry about cohesion, but a good hockey player can play with anybody. So far, we haven't gotten hurt."

In Vancouver, Canucks' coach Harry Neale gave credit where it was due.

"I'm not sure any team has come in here and played any better for the entire game in a more disciplined, confident, methodical fashions than St. Louis did," said Neale.

It was the first outing for Williams and Butler, less than 24 hours after they arrived in Vancouver. But Neale said his new players were not to blame for the loss to the impressive Blues.

"I don't think you could point the finger at them and say they were the reason we didn't get it done as they were in a very large group of players that could play better."

Neale said Williams and Butler were tired after travelling. The Tiger agreed, adding he was also fighting the flu.

"I was really nervous and my shoulders right now are aching, and I think it's from being tense out there," Williams said.

Two power-play goals made the difference for St. Louis, which got markers from Wayne Babych, Blair Chapman and Brian Sutter.

Curt Fraser was the only Canuck to beat goaltender Mike Liut, who blocked 22 shots.

"Getting rid of Williams was really tough," Imlach said, "but you can't let your heart rule your mind. I really like Derlago. He has a lot of zip, a lot of speed. But, if I can get someone better than what we have right now, we'll trade some more."

Imlach said he's determined to bring players with speed to Toronto.

"One day we'll be able to challenge for the Stanley Cup. If we can skate with the (Montreal) Canadiens, we can beat them, but the way we were going we couldn't.

Darryl Sittler, one of the team's stars placed on the trading block by Imlach, also had two goals. Pat Hickey and John Anderson had one each.

The Islanders, who outshot Toronto 43-28, ran up against a hot goaltender in Jiri Crha, starting only his second NHL game. John Tonelli, Bob Bourne, Bob Nystrom and Stefan Persson scored for the Islanders, who trailed 5-1 before finding the target in the final 11 minutes of the game.

Elsewhere, Washington Capitals upset Montreal Canadiens 3-1, Buffalo Sabres defeated Quebec Nordiques 3-1, Hartford Whalers dumped Edmonton Oilers 6-2, Colorado Rockies outscored Philadelphia Flyers 8-6 and Minnesota North Stars tied Atlanta Flames 4-4.

The Caps pulled off a first in Landover, Md., by defeating the defending Stanley Cup champions for the first time ever — in 34 prior meetings, dating back to 1974, Washington had managed but three draws.

No politics in game room at Village

By STEVE JACOBSON
Newsday

LAKE PLACID — It was Chinese New Year in the Olympic Village and the party was in the lounge of the Chinese dormitory. There were plenty of American cookies and a colorless Chinese beverage, several American guests, laughter and good will that leaped the language barrier in a single bound.

There also was a water glass filled with a rich brown liquid that was offered to Joe Bowman, supervisor of entertainment at the Village. "Sugar water. Sugar water," the Chinese said hospitably. Bowman drank. "It was straight Jack Daniels," Bowman said.

The Chinese have been the pets of the Village ever since they checked in a few days before almost anybody else. Most of them have never been exposed to a culture other than their own.

In the first days they were taught Frisbee by the state troopers in the open quadrangle that gives the Village the look of a college campus. The Chinese were fascinated by the aerodynamics of the device. They plan to take several home.

When the athletes from other countries arrived, the Chinese were equally fascinated by a game they saw being played by two men at a low table with hard, brightly colored balls and tapered wooden sticks. A ball would roll into a corner of the table and disappear and the Chinese would laugh. They had never seen anybody play pool. They took lessons by sign language and now play often on their own.

The game room just off the disco is the meeting place of the world, offering pool, Foosball, pinball and electronic games. All games are free. They captivate the uninitiated. Two teen-age Russian figure skaters sit endlessly at the simulated racing cars, spinning the wheel with one hand and working the shift lever with the other and wincing with each crash.

"There really are no politics in here," said Mike Goode, a British army sergeant. "These guys are athletes; I wouldn't be surprised if the Russians here didn't even know what was going on in Afghanistan."

Goode makes one political exception for hockey. "How come you see the Polish team playing Sweden and hitting like anything on the ice and when they play the Russians, they're afraid to check? They always hold back."

There are cultural similarities. Figure skaters can be instantly identified because they are always looking at their reflections and preening. Cultural differences also are apparent. The East Germans can be seen walking the quadrangle in groups of five and six, all wearing the cowboy hats they had purchased. Some athletes need translation to distinguish the hair spray from the deodorant spray in the welcome gift packages. Some also need explanations.

The Norwegians and the Swedes, considered to be the most hip of the athletes, constantly ask for Dr. Hook music in the disco. The live theater was crammed for Tanya Tucker.

The Chinese are most shy. The Austrians and the Italians are most forward. The distinctions can be seen in Tramps, the disco imported from Washington, and staffed by house disc jockey Cheryl Bauer and hostess Beth Spangenberg, a Washington nurse. Their responsibility includes keeping people smiling.

A cheerful greeting from the Austrians is generally accompanied by a friendly pat on the bottom. "They leave no question about letting us know what they have in mind," Spangenberg said. "We've made it a joke between us. Nobody is offended."

However, when the Texas Cowgirls disco dance troupe — in their abbreviated costumes — appeared and offered to dance, the Austrians were intimidated. The Americans, whom the hostesses say have been as protective of them as brothers, danced with the performers.

Few of the female athletes are interested in dancing. The most visible exception is British speed skater Kim Ferran, who is known as the queen of the Village. She is immediately recognizable by her eye makeup and painted-on disco pants. She may be having more fun than anybody.

By Thursday, the traditional Olympic romances will be nearing their ends. Sad faces are the tradition.

"If I don't win a medal," said Mike Goode, the British sergeant, "a lot of people won't win medals. I will have had the experience of a lifetime here."

Speedskater arrested

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — Speedskater Peter Mueller of the United States was arrested Wednesday on a charge of attempted petty larceny after he tried to take an Olympic flag from its pole, police said.

Mueller, 25, a gold medallist in the 1976 Olympics at Innsbruck, was to be arraigned before judge James Moscatello Thursday night.

Remarkable home record keeps Cougar fans happy

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Victoria Cougars are heading for a record season at the gate and a good reason for the strong support is the Western Hockey League team's ability to keep the home crowd happy.

Cougars added to their excellent home record and overall reputation with Tuesday's 5-2 victory over Seattle Breakers.

It was Victoria's 23rd victory at Memorial Arena against only three setbacks — two to Seattle and one to Portland Winter Hawks. It is the best home record in the league.

Little wonder, then, Cougars are certain to attract more than 100,000 fans, over the 36-game home campaign, for the first time in their WHL history.

Tuesday's crowd of 2,495, including several hundred Cubs and Boy Scouts, boosted Victoria's attendance total to 78,235 for 26 games.

Home happiness Tuesday was supplied again by Barry Pederson, Greg Adams and a defence that, for a third straight game, appears to be overcoming inconsistencies evidenced in earlier stretches this season.

The always-dependable Pederson scored his 42nd and 43rd goals of the campaign and then set up Adams for his 49th, while the Cougars were shorthanded, to provide the necessary sock on attack. Defenceman Tony Feltrin and Brad Palmer scored the other goals for Victoria, now 8-3 over Seattle this season and with a 17-12 road record.

Brian Graves and John Neeld scored for Breakers.

Cougars struck for two goals in the first five minutes but the threat of a romp ended when Seattle coach Monty Miron yanked starting netminder Jeff Lastiwka in favor of Ken Hodge.

Lastiwka's departure came after he made a glaring clearing mistake. The puck wound up on Feltrin's stick and the defenceman, who had just come out of the penalty box, had no trouble scoring into an open net.

Despite the victory, the second-place Cougars failed to gain on the West Division-leading Winter Hawks. Portland, getting off the hook after trailing 3-1 after two periods, remained three points ahead of Victoria by defeating the Wranglers 5-4 in overtime in Calgary.

Victoria rink still unbeaten

Times News Services

Defending Canadian champion Flora Martin of Victoria and Connie Barker of North Vancouver each won two games Tuesday to become the only unbeaten rinks at the B.C. senior women's curling championship in West Vancouver.

Martin downed Mary Johnston of Nanaimo 8-5 after besting Dorothy Fines of Rossland 9-3 to improve her record to 3-0.

Barker ran her record to 4-0 with an 8-6 decision over Johnston and a 10-8 victory over Shirley Hawke of White Rock.

Still in the running is Shirley MacDonald of Dawson Creek who has a 3-1 record after downing Hawke 11-6 and Marg Valentine of Richmond 15-1 in seven ends.

In other games, Pearl Hiebert beat Kay Gable of Prince George and lost 7-6 to Fines.

At Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Ontario's John Kawaja just about clinched a playoff spot in the Canadian junior men's championship later this week with a 5-4 win over Quebec. Earlier he defeated Manitoba 5-3.

Ontario was undefeated after six rounds and will have to lose two of its final four games to jeopardize its entry into the playoff round.

Stacey Coomber of Nanaimo, representing B.C., split his two games. He defeated Alberta 8-3 after losing to Saskatchewan 8-7 in an extra end.

After Tuesday's play, the Territories is 5-1, followed by Northern Ontario and Quebec at 4-2, New Brunswick, B.C. and Alberta at 3-3, Newfoundland, Manitoba and Saskatchewan at 2-4, and Nova Scotia and P.E.I. 1-5.

The first place team after the 10 draws gains an automatic entry into the championship game Saturday afternoon against the winner of the semi-final game Saturdy morning between the teams finishing second and third.

Bulls trip Sonics

By Associated Press

Coach Jerry Sloan was at a loss to explain Chicago Bulls' performance Tuesday night . . . but this time he was not complaining.

"We did some positive things tonight for the first time in many games," Sloan said after the lowly (21-42) Bulls defeated the defending National Basketball Association champion Seattle (45-17) SuperSonics, 115-106.

"But I am frustrated and at a loss to understand how we can play so well against the best team in the NBA and most of the time can't get any phase of the game together."

In a couple of other surprises, Cleveland Cavaliers crushed Phoenix Suns 128-109 and New Jersey Nets whipped San Diego Clippers 123-113, while in one other game New York Knicks downed Portland Trail Blazers, 113-103.

Reserve forward Dwight Jones and centre Artis Gilmore contributed six points apiece in the final 2:43 as Chicago broke Seattle's eight-game winning streak.

"I have reached the point where my injured leg appears to be completely healed," said Gilmore, who led the Bulls with 23 points. "I did a lot of things tonight, but I have played well in other games.

"The one thing that stands out, however, is that I was doing a lot of passing to (Reggie) [illegible], (David) Greenwood and (Ricky) Sobers and letting them shoot while I was crashing the boards."

Gus Williams led the Sonics with 33 points.

Dave Robisch scored 28 points for Cleveland and Kenny Carr added 22, including 12 in the fourth quarter. The Cavaliers had to stave off a furious fourth-period rally by the Suns.

Overfishing is harming rehabilitation attempts

by stewart lang

Overfishing appears to be hurting attempts by the Amalgamated Conservation Society and other related groups to rehabilitate salmon stocks in a number of southern Vancouver Island streams.

About 267,000 coho eggs at Sooke, approximately 26,000 coho eggs at Shawnigan Creek and 24,000 coho eggs at Goldstream were placed in incubation boxes during the fall of 1979.

In addition, there were 15 coho redds in the side channels at Goldstream and 21,000 steelhead eggs placed in incubation boxes during the spring.

Volunteer efforts on the Goldstream produce about three additional adult coho per man hour in good years.

Unfortunately, overfishing has gradually depleted the number of coho adults returning to spawn — despite the enhancement efforts.

"The increasing exploitation rates by fisheries must be reduced, in specific ways and places, on immatures and spawners of depleted wild stocks to avoid the approaching collapse of their production," states the ACS in their year-end report.

To illustrate this point, the ACS explains that 107 seiners fished Areas 17 and 18 (Sidney to Nanaimo) in 1976 compared to one seiner in 1972. A majority of the coho grilse harvested by this fishery came from the wild Goldstream stocks.

They suggest commercial closures are required in the specific sub-areas (of Areas 17 and 18) these depleted wild stocks utilize for nursery and pre-spawning activities.

Only a minority of chinook and coho spawners reach Areas 17 and 18 after the heavy commercial exploitation off the west coast and in Juan de Fuca Strait. Then they have to run the gauntlet of the seiners operating in inside waters. These boats take a heavy toll of grilse as well as some of the surviving adult spawners.

This double takeout — harvesting the returning spawners and, at the same time, depleting the stocks of grilse that provide spawning stock for the following year — is causing a serious problem.

In Goldstream, only 91 coho spawners returned in 1979. Prior to 1972, the average return was 900 coho.

Unless more fine tuning on both commercial and sports fishing is implemented this downward trend is expected to continue. Unless something is done, only 50 coho are expected to return to spawn in the Goldstream in 1981.

Yes, I did say sports fishing.

We have to give up a little something right now in order not to miss out entirely in the future.

With this in mind, the ACS has come out in favor of a 16-inch size limit on both coho and chinooks in specific areas and on stocks where there is a proven conservation problem.

Federal Fisheries attempted to put an unworkable 20-inch limit on chinooks as of Jan. 1 and then backed off when the federal election was called.

The ACS report said two sports fishermen trying to catch grilse will kill up to six per boat whereas another two fishermen trying to avoid catching the smaller fish will experience an incidental catch of only two grilse per trip.

Careful releasing of grilse produces a mortality rate of around 50 per cent, giving a kill of only one grilse per trip for those fishermen attempting to conserve the stock.

Some of the conservation efforts include not using lures that grilse are susceptible to and avoiding areas where grilse are concentrated.

The ACS reasons that an "increased size limit of 16 inches will delay the start of targeting on grilse well into the winter, when relatively few sportsmen are fishing . . ."

This delay alone will save additional fish for the future.

But any savings by sports fishermen won't be noticed if commercial fishermen aren't limited.

Precision teams in skating meet

Something new will be on display when 374 skaters show up to compete in 24 events at the inaugural Vancouver Island region figure-skating competition Saturday and Sunday at Juan de Fuca Arena.

A total of nine "precision teams" have entered the competition. This recent development involves teams, each composed of 16 to 26 skaters, competing to music in selected formation manoeuvres.

A full slate of age-class competitions for both men and women will start each day at 8 a.m.

Halldorson bid falls four short

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Jim Colbert, struggling a little after playing three outstanding rounds, birdied the final two holes Tuesday for a three-under-par 70 and held off Canada's charging Dan Halldorson to win the $300,000 Tucson Open by four strokes and pocket $54,000.

Colbert began the final round of the rain-delayed tournament with a seven-stroke advantage over Halldorson, and three others. But Halldorson, from Shilo Man., who has yet to win a PGA event, fired a 67, and had narrowed Colbert's advantage to two strokes with a birdie on No.15.

Colbert, however, who had bogeys on No.12 and No.14, parred 15 and 16, then sank a short birdie putt on No. 17 and a 25-foot birdie putt on the final hole, while Halldorson settled for pars on the last three holes.

Colbert, suffering back spasms brought on by the rain and cold that plagued the tournament from the beginning, finished at 270, 22-under-par for the 72-hole tournament at the 7,095-yard, par-73 Tucson National course.

The tournament windup was two days late, after rain delayed completion of the first round until Saturday.

Allen Miller closed with a 67 and finished third at 275, while Tom Purtzer was fourth at 276, after a final-round 68.

Andy Bean, with a 69, and defending champion Bruce Lietzke, with a 70, finished eight strokes back at 278.

Halldorson earned $32,400 for his second-place finish. Dave Barr of Kelowna finished in a tie for 10th and earned $7,200. Jim Nelford of Burnaby had a 284 total for $2,040.

Colbert's 22-under-par was only three strokes back of Johnny Miller's record for the Tucson tournament.

Colbert, 38, in his 15th year on the tour, last won an individual tour title in 1974, although he did team with Dean Refram to win the PGA's team championship event in 1975.

The Tucson victory boosted his 1980 earnings to $63,000, and, ranked 43rd on the PGA's all-time money list heading into this year, He now has won $737,000 in his career.

The new Brier in a changing year

By BILL WALKER

As this is the year of change in curling — a new Island format for the women, a new B. C. playoff for the men — naturally the biggest event of them all, the Brier, should lead the way. It does.

First is the new name — the Labatt Brier.

Yes, Brier: the old name from Macdonalds along with a new sponsor, Labatts, sticks for the Canadian men's championship which will take place at Calgary, March 2-9. The Labatt people in no way want to mess with tradition.

Secondly will be the matter of determining the winner. That is also different.

For the first 50 years, a round-robin schedule, without a playoff, determined the national champion.

Now, however, the new Brier will feature a round-robin preliminary series followed by a playoff in which the first-place team in the round-robin gains a bye to the final, while the second and third-place teams meet in a sudden-death semi-final to determine the other finalist.

The semi-final will be played Saturday, March 8, and the final Sunday afternoon, March 9.

Another change in the Brier involves the draw for position in the schedule.

In past years, the draw was made the day before competition began. In latter years, it was felt this caused some problems for spectators and media and at the conclusion of last year's Brier in Ottawa, the draw for this year's event was made.

Similarly the draw for the 1981 Brier in Halifax will be made during the 1980 Brier in Calgary.

The draw has been designed so that no team plays more than two games a day, even though there will be three draws on three days.

Tim Horrigan's Victoria Club rink has draw former two-time World junior champion Paul Gowsell of Calgary in his first game Sunday, March 2.

Then, in order he meets Newfoundland Monday afternoon, New Brunswick Monday night, the Territories Tuesday afternoon, Ontario Tuesday night, Quebec Wednesday morning, Nova Scotia Wednesday night, Manitoba Thursday afternoon, Northern Ontario Thursday night, Saskatchewan Friday morning and Prince Edward Island Friday afternoon.

Which isn't a bad schedule, especially if he can get by Gowsell. The complete schedule will be released later.

Otherwise, it is perhaps fitting that in a year in which Victoria is again represented in the national championship that the sons of a member of the last city rink to play in the 1958 Brier are making news elsewhere.

Scott Dalziel, 17, and Todd Dalziel, 15, are the sons of Dale Dalziel, who was a member of the Tony Gutoski rink in 1958.

And Sunday, Scott skipped and Todd was the vice skip of the rink that won the United States junior men's championship at Colorado Springs. Other members of the rink are Scott Gerard, 1[illegible] and Paul Thompson, 17.

The Dalziels now hail from Devil's Lake, North Dakota, and their rink will represent the U.S. in the World Junior at Kitchener, Ont., March 9-16.

A Victoria rink skipped by Gerry Miller defeated Juan de Fuca's Gary Mangleson 6-2 at Lake Cowichan to capture the Lower Island zone Kinsmen curling title.

Miller, Murray McLeod, Fred Kimmons and Jack Moar now advance to the provincial Kinsmen final in Golden, March 29-31.

A reception for Oak Bay's provincial girls' championship Lana Lacheur rink will be held in lounge of the Oak Bay Recreation Centre, Wednesday, Feb. 27 at 8 p.m.

A 'ladies only' squash weekend

By MAX LOW

For the first time in British Columbia, women are to get their own weekend of squash instruction and tournament play this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

The weekend, to which complete beginners as well as experienced players are invited, will be at the Harbor Square Squash Club and already the registrations are coming in steadily.

"This kind of thing has already been done in Calgary," says Harbor Square pro Stuart Dixon. "It was so popular that in the last women's weekend more than 120 took part and even then they had to limit the number. It hasn't been tried yet in this province, though."

Cost for the weekend is $10 and for that you get a guarantee of at least three games (in the "A-B" section if you've had tournament experience or the "C-D" division if you haven't), instruction on scoring and game strategy and complimentary wine and cheese lunches each day. The Island's three registered squash pros — Phil Green, Tony Hardy and Dixon — will be in attendance the whole weekend.

It should not only be a great opportunity for those wishing to learn the rapidly growing game of squash but also a chance for those already playing to get experience against some of the top women in Canada.

Women's squash in Victoria has been strengthened by the recent arrival from Calgary of Sandy Drever who, along with Victoria's Andrie Levey, will compete in the "A-B" division. Beryl Paton of Calgary, reigning Canadian champion, will also take part as well as all the members of the B.C. women's squash team.

For more details you can call Dixon at 388-4143.

Last weekend, the four Harbor Square courts were teeming with action when the zone playoffs for the Labatts B.C. team championships were held.

Each team consisted of one "B" ranked player, one "C" player, one "D" player and one woman and the Sussex Squash Club squad of Rod Symington, Bob Croll, Jim Dryden and Dianna Simmons won the round-robin event with 17 points. Harbor Square was next with 15 and UVic had 12.

Sussex now goes on to the seven-zone B.C. final in Vancouver Mar. 1 and 2.

Still on the subject of squash, the hottest name in the game locally right now is Richard Jackson — and he's still only 16!

Richard defeated Sher Horne, 3-1, in the men's "A" final of the recent annual UVic invitational tournament. Horne, also one of B.C.'s most promising juniors, got past Dixon in the quarter-finals and then upset Western Canadian champion Mike Greenwood of Victoria.

Best game of the tourney was the one-hour, 20-minute struggle between Jackson and Phil Nanavati in the other semi-final. It went right down to the wire with Jackson winning, 3-2.

Rod Symington defeated Scott MacInnis, 3-0, to win the men's "B" title, Peter Woolley downed Rene Chave, 3-1, in the "C" final and Dave Cribbs beat Keith Watson, 3-1, to take the men's "D" award. Debbie Jackson got past Cindy Brown, 3-1, in the women's "B" final (there was no "A" event and the "A" women competed in the men's events) and Mary Auburn beat Fiona Webster, 3-0, in the women's "C" final.

Everything seems to be going right just now for Richard Jackson, son of John and reigning Canadian senior women's tennis champ Enid Jackson, as he has been selected as the B.C. representative to the Canadian junior squash trials, starting Friday in Toronto.

Three under-19 players will be chosen from the trials to form Canada's team for the world junior squash championships in Sweden.

Now, Richard may not make the team this time as there's quite a bit of talent nationally around the 18-year-old mark. But, at 16, he's still got plenty of time left as a junior and a great future ahead of him in the game of squash.

Former star has leg amputated

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Harvey Kuenn, former Detroit Tigers baseball star, has had his right leg amputated below the knee after being in hospital for two weeks with an arterial blood clot.

Kuenn, 49, who has been a coach with Milwaukee Brewers since 1971, says he intends to return to work with an artifical leg.

Loos leads Viking win

Billy Loos hit 12 of 21 field shots during a 30-point effort to help University of Victoria Vikings to a 106-99 decision over Simon Fraser University Clansmen in an intercollegiate men's exhibition basketball game Tuesday in the McKinnon Gymnasium.

It was the third win for Vikings in as many meetings between the clubs this season.

In a women's exhibition, UVic Vikettes tripped the SFU Clanswomen, 64-46.

Vikings and Clansmen combined for a total of 160 shots during the fast-paced contest.

Vikings, rated No. 2 in the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union, led 55-46 at half time and were helped by the fact that SFU star forward Jay Triano was sidelined with an injured hand.

Neil Beiker scored 28 points to spark the Clan while Tom Skerlak added 18.

Luanne Hebb scored 22 points and hauled down 16 rebounds to pace Vikettes to victory.

Sandi Lewis and Carol Turney-Loos each added 10 points for the UVic squad, which took a 36-30 half-time lead.

Tracey Huclak and Karen Flaten with 12 points each, were top scorers for Simon Fraser, which plays in the National Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

Vikettes outrebounded Simon Fraser 46-41 and had a higher shooting percentage from the floor, 37-32. The Clanswomen were better shooting from the foul line, sinking 75 per cent of their shots compared with Vikette's 67 per cent.

Darrel Adams led Totems with 18 points and Paul Russell added 12.

League-leading scorer Al Cole set the pace for Braves with 26 points and Charlie Webster topped Bays, who trailed 52-26 at half time, with 19.

Dexter Williams fired 21 points to spark the Panthers.

SMU gets another chance by meeting Port Hardy, the North Island's No. 3 squad, Thursday at Duncan in a battle for the wild card berth.

The tournament begins at 3 p.m. Friday and continues at 9 a.m. Saturday with the final set for 8 p.m.

MacLean near scoring record

Ian MacLean covered a lot of ground Tuesday night in his bid to set a new goal-scoring record in the South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League.

MacLean, who only needs two goals in his final three games to set a new mark, fired five goals while helping Saanich Braves to a 22-0 romp over Juan de Fuca Gulls at Pearkes Arena.

The Saanich marksman now has 70 points, one short of the record set last year by Wayne Proceviat of Esquimalt Legion.

Marty Irvine topped the Saanich gunners with six goals, Tracy Patterson added three, doubles were fired by Shawn Connors and Greg Bertrand and singles came from Jamie Bowes, Mark Byrne, Phil Varcoe and Wes Waychuk.

Marty Wakelyn only had to make 18 saves in the mismatch to record the shutout while Mike Spiteri of Juan de Fuca faced 94 shots.

Before the judge

A 21-year-old Esquimalt man charged with four counts of breaking and entering and one count of possession of stolen property was denied bail Tuesday in provincial court by Judge Harold Alder.

Alton Burt MacLellan, 1145 Bewdley, is charged with break-ins Feb. 12 and 13, one at a Fort Street apartment and three at apartments at 1641 McKenzie.

MacLellan elected trial by judge without jury and was remanded until next Tuesday to fix a preliminary hearing date.

Judge Fred Green imposed a 10-day intermittent term on a 24-year-old Abbotsford man who changed his plea to guilty on a charge of breach of probation.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith told the court Peter Steven Francis was convicted Nov. 15, 1977, in Vancouver county court on 20 counts of false pretences and was sentenced Dec. 12, 1977, to 12 months in jail and given 18 months probation.

Conditions of the probation included reporting once monthly to his probation officer and finding and maintaining employment, Smith added.

The probation was transferred to Victoria where Francis told probation officer Kathy Martin he wanted to leave for Saskatchewan to continue his employment. Martin told Francis he had to apply to the court to vary his probation order and told him to report back to her July 20. Smith said Francis failed to keep the appointment, leading to the charge.

Vancouver lawyer Thomas Rafael said the relationship between Francis and Martin was "poor at best" because of a personality conflict. He said Francis did not report to her between July and October of last year but was now on good terms with his present probation officer.

"Really what it boils down to is a wilful failure to report," Green observed.

The judge said it was the principle which concerned him and imposed the jail term.

A 21-year-old man was given a three-month jail term by Alder, who said he would recommend a one-year driving ban.

Indrek Muursepp, 1220 Rudlin, pleaded guilty to driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 Jan. 30.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Muursepp was seen speeding in the 1100-block Johnson by Victoria police, who chased him to Fernwood, where he stalled his vehicle. Subsequent readings of .16 and .17 were obtained.

Muursepp was previously convicted of impaired driving and refusing a breath test demand Sept. 30, 1975, in Squamish, receiving a $300 fine on the first charge and a suspended sentence and one year's probation on the second. He was also convicted of driving while under suspension and dangerous driving Aug. 24, 1976, also in Squamish, and given concurrent, 10-day jail terms. On July 24, 1977, in Kitimat, Muursepp was convicted of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 and was sentenced to three months.

Defence lawyer Brian MacKenzie said his client was an unemployed fisherman and asked for a term which would not interfere with the fishing season which starts in April.

Alder also ordered Muursepp to accept alcoholism therapy during his probation period.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Thomas William Lehman, 19, of 9561 Canora, $1,000; Graham Joseph Giles, 29, of 2516 Trans-Canada, $400; and Christopher Hugh John Keys, 19, of 1466 Rockland, $400.

Septage meet Feb. 26

A public meeting to inform Metchosin about the Capital Regional District's proposal to build a septage composting site off Windfall Road will be held Feb. 26.

The meeting will be at Metchosin Elementary at 8 p.m., said Shirley Wilde, president of Albert Head Ratepayers' Association.

Wilde said Metchosin CRD director Mac Tipton, chief engineer Norman Howard and Don Wakelyn of the health inspection division will attend.

$150,000 award stays

A 29-year-old Sidney man will receive the $150,000 awarded him by a B.C. Supreme Court jury last week for future wage loss, Mr. Justice Hugh Legg has ruled.

Charles Arthur Fields was awarded a total of $191,000, including $150,000 for future wage loss, for injuries in a 1979 traffic accident on the Malahat. But this was discounted by 20 per cent by the jury because he wasn't wearing a seatbelt.

George Kincaid of Vancouver, counsel for defendant Russ G. Lloyd of Mill Bay, opposed what is usually a formality when Fields' lawyer Ronald MacIsaac asked Legg to enter judgment in the amount returned by the jury.

Kincaid said the jury's award of $150,000 for future wage loss was unreasonable and not in accord with the evidence at the four-day trial and asked for judgment to be entered in a lower amount.

Legg, in a written judgment, said he was unable to agree with Kincaid.

"In this case there was some evidence upon which the jury could reach its assessment of the probable loss of future income," he said. "Its verdict on this point in unequivocal.

"The decisions of this court . . . make clear that a judge must accept the results of a jury's finding under these circumstances."

Fields was a passenger in a car travelling north when Lloyd's vehicle crossed the double solid centre line and collided head on. Fields suffered a depressed skull fracture and other injuries including loss of one finger.

3-month trial for Tofino 23

The jury trial of 23 men charged after the May 22 seizure of 33 tons of marijuana near Tofino is expected to take three months, a county court judge was told Tuesday.

Tentative trial date is March 31 but this was not confirmed Tuesday. The trial date will be set Feb. 28.

Defence counsel William Deverell of Vancouver told Judge Montague Drake there had been a flurry of last-minute activity and because all 23 men are from the United States, Colombia and Costa Rica, arrangements for deciding which lawyers are appearing for which men had been difficult to make.

He also said some of the men may apply to have their trial severed from the others and some may be applying for Legal Aid.

All 23 were jointly committed last month for trial on charges of importing marijuana, possessing marijuana on the territorial sea of Canada for the purpose of trafficking and possessing marijuana in the county of Nanaimo for the purpose of trafficking.

In addition, five of the seven Americans were committed for trial on a charge of conspiracy to import marijuana.

Mr. Wizard takes aim at adults

HOLLYWOOD (LAT) — After a career of making science more exciting and more understandable to children, Mr. Wizard is about to turn his efforts toward doing the same for adults.

With the backing and financial support of the National Science Foundation, Don Herbert — TV's Mr. Wizard since 1951 — has produced a series of science reports that will soon be popping up on local news programs across the country.

The goal, Herbert says, is to get "as many people as possible to understand more about science and technology."

That meant developing programming for commercial television. The National Science Foundation helps fund public television's respected science series Nova, but it was looking for something different when it gave Herbert a $500,000 grant in the spring of 1978. "They figure the people who watch Nova already know about science," he explains. "They're hoping to reach the people who wouldn't tune in Nova."

Cooper loot lucky find for Free Fall

scott's world

by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Author J.D. Reed, whose novel, Free Fall, is based on the exploits of skyjacker D.B. Cooper, is in clover.

The book, only recently in the stalls, received a tremendous boost from the FBI last week with the announcement that part of D.B. Cooper's $200,000 loot was discovered in the forests of Washington by a family on an outing.

Free Fall is a fictional account of Cooper's hijacking Northwest Airlines flight 305 on Thanksgiving eve of 1971 and getting away with almost a quarter of a million bucks by parachuting into the woods.

Thereafter, Cooper became something of a cult anti-hero, a romantic figure who beat the system and got rich without violence or bloodshed. Cooper T-shirts blossomed. A D.B. Cooper club was founded. There were Cooper bumper stickers.

Ironically, the last thing in the world the FBI wanted to do was promote Free Fall, for several reasons.

For openers, the mysterious Cooper's real identity has never been established. That was the name found on the passenger manifest for the flight. Secondly, the FBI has never caught up with the daring skyjacker and isn't particularly pleased by reviving memories of one of the bureau's rare failures.

The feds also are disenchanted with the way Reed glamorizes Cooper in the fictional person of J.R. Meade, an ex-Green Beret soldier of fortune. The FBI isn't crazy about lionizing felons.

Also, the agency is afraid the crazies will once again invade the 200 square miles of forest in the Cascades along the Washington-Oregon border into which Cooper parachuted. Nine years ago hordes of adventurers almost stomped the woods flat in search of Cooper and the booty.

Author Reed wrote a screen treatment of Free Fall three years ago and sold it to Casablanca Filmworks before writing the novel.

"The FBI didn't know I was writing the book for two years," Reed said, "When they heard about it, the Washington bureau issued a statement saying the department was upset because it might screw up their investigation.

"They also didn't want all the fortune hunters looking for the loot again or trying to find Cooper's body. If, indeed, he was killed when he landed at 40 miles per hour in a parachute that might have been too small for him."

Reed, of course, is delighted by the windfall publicity involved by the latest development in the nine-year mystery.

"They estimate the campers found between $3-4,000 of the money," Reed said. "It didn't surprise me. A guy jumping out of a plane on a stormy night might have lost the whole bag of money on the way down. But that doesn't mean he's dead. You could ask what happened to the rest of the money.

"It also doesn't rule out Bryant 'Jack' Coffelt's story. He was the strongest contender among the hundreds of men who came out and confessed he was Cooper. Coffelt died in Hawaii in 1975.

"He knew a lot of details that proved to be correct that the FBI never released. But I don't believe it was Coffelt."

Reed is something of an authority on Cooper, if it can be said anyone is an authority on an unknown man.

He spent two years researching his book, interviewing the two stewardesses who were aboard the jet when Cooper threatened to blow up the plane with a fake bomb. On three occasions he trudged through the woods in the vicinity where Cooper was supposed to have landed.

A former FBI agent gave him information on the case and Reed discussed at length the research done by the TV show 60 Minutes which had considered devoting a segment of the program to Cooper's identity and crime.

"60 Minutes gave up the project when their researchers couldn't pin down a good suspect," said Reed. "I think they did as good a job of investigation as the FBI. And when I wrote the book I had the advantage of both research jobs plus a writer's imagination.

"Nothing in the book can really be contradicted by the FBI. The antagonist in the novel, the guy chasing the hero (Cooper), is a real man who is now retired and who knew I was doing the book.

"In the final analysis, the book is an adventure story with an idealized D.B. Cooper. I would rather remember him as a mythical anti-hero than a two-bit criminal.

$1,000 fine for legal ads

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver lawyer Jack James was reprimanded and fined $1,000 and costs Tuesday by a three-member disciplinary committee of the Law Society of B.C.

The committee had found James guilty Jan. 2 of unbecoming conduct for running a "promotional and slick" campaign advertising his legal services.

The advertising accompanied the opening last fall of James' downtown Law Shoppe with cut rate services including a $19.95 special on wills.

Law society deputy secretary Dennis Olmstead said the reprimand means a formal notation will be made on James' professional record.

At a separate hearing Tuesday involving James, a disciplinary committee of the law society was told the practice of soliciting new legal business through subtle forms of advertising such as taking bank managers to lunch is widespread throughout the legal profession.

The claim was made in defence of James, who is also accused of professional misconduct and conduct unbecoming a member of the law society for direct solicitation of business through mailing letters accompanied by advertising brochures to two real estate firms, contrary to the society's rules of ethics.

James was cited for sending letters, Nov. 9, last year to Alley Estates Ltd. and Coquitlam Realty, accompanied by advertising brochures and a Law Shoppe price list for legal services offered, including $200 for conveyancing a real estate transaction.

James' hearing will continue next Tuesday.

Library strike set Saturday

KELOWNA (CP) — Library workers at several Okanagan communities served 72-hour strike notice today, putting them in a legal position to go off the job Saturday morning.

The 55 workers, represented by Local 1123 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, are seeking a 9.5-per-cent increase in a one-year contract on an average wage of $5.60 an hour.

The workers are employed at Kelowna, Vernon, Rutland, Coldstream, Golden and Silver Creek.

New 'tricks' queries

Jane Burnes, an information officer in Premier Bill Bennett's office, has been questioned by RCMP about the dirty tricks affair.

Ms. Burnes said she was was visited by two RCMP officers Monday — less than a week after Attorney-General Allan Williams said no charges would be laid following a lengthy police probe into the writing of phoney letters to newspapers.

However, at that time, police said their files would remain open.

Ms. Burnes said she and the police talked about Ron Greig, a former aide in Bennett's office who resigned without explanation after his name was mentioned in connection with a phoney letter to the editor signed with the name of NDP supporter Gordon Townsend.

"At the end, they said I told them nothing they did not already know," she said.

Ms. Burnes said she told RCMP that she never saw Greig write a letter and sign it with Townsend's name.

She said she believes the RCMP visit resulted from criticism that she had not been interviewed by police.

Williams said last week that an RCMP investigation of 54 letters found that at least five were out-and-out forgeries, but there was no way their authors could identified.

Bonner should go NDP MLA insists

Atlin NDP MLA Al Passarell has asked Energy Minister Bob McClelland to call for the immediate resignations of B.C. Hydro chairman Robert Bonner and the 24 staff members responsible for a company document detailing plans for new hydroelectric projects in northern B.C.

Passarell said Tuesday in a letter to McClelland he is concerned about statements made in the Hydro document indicating that contentious information and project costs should not be made public and that none of the power generated by the two proposed projects would be available to local communities.

"Before the U.S. or any foreign nation receives power from these dams the people of northern B.C. should have their needs fulfilled," he said.

$50 million rain bill?

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta should spend $50 million to increase rainfall in southern Alberta, provincial Liberal Leader Nick Taylor said.

Taylor told a news conference the money should come from the $5.5-billion Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund and go into a cloud seeding program.

Each additional 2.5 centimetres of rain could increase wheat production by four to eight bushels an acre, Taylor said, citing statistics from University of Oklahoma.

A project in western Oklahoma was expected to increase farm income by $84 million a year by adding 12.5 centimetres of rain to the 62.5 centimetres normally expected in the area each year. Taylor said the benefit could be even higher now because the figure was calculated four years ago.

He said extra snow could be piled up in the mountains each winter to help the ski business and provide more water for summer off-stream storage.

The provincial government has run a weather modification and hail suppression experiment near Red Deer for several years. Taylor said the true worth of cloud seeding should be determined in tests over an area of as much as 840 square kilometres over three years.

He said a government study's talk about possible legal problems should neighboring provinces or states complain about loss of precipitation was merely a legalistic concern developed by Premier Peter Lougheed as an excuse to do nothing.

Neighborhood watch rides the range

CALGARY (CP) — A province-wide system of range patrols is being set up to try to reduce rural crime in Alberta.

Stan Wilson, chairman of the Alberta cattle commission, said at a news conference that experimental range patrols at Nanton, Didsbury, Provost and Cochrane have helped significantly reduce rural crime in those areas.

The commission and Western Stock Growers Association, working with the RCMP, announced they are organizing a province-wide system of range patrols as part of a rural crime watch.

The livestock organizations are interested because cattle rustling comprises a large part of rural crime in the province.

"Range patrols are extra eyes and ears to the RCMP," Insp. Len Jerritt of the RCMP told the news conference. He will oversee operations from Calgary east to the Saskatchewan border.

"The program itself is preventive. Rural crime watch is neighborhood crime watch taken out into the country."

The program has a number of aspects, but includes a high-profile range patrol which has volunteer farmers patrolling on horseback, in trucks and even in private aircraft to watch for unusual goings-on.

Wheat price talk to go on

REGINA (CP) — Canadian and American agricultural officials have agreed to continue talks aimed at raising wheat prices, Gordon Barber, a spokesman for the Palliser Wheat Growers Association, said.

In a prepared statement, Barber said a meeting was held Feb. 12 in Washington between the Minnesota Association of Wheat Growers, the National Association of Wheat Growers and Palliser. American and Canadian government officials were also involved, he said.

The release quotes Jack Felgenhauer, president of the National Association of Wheat Growers, as saying with farm costs rising, producers "cannot continue to operate any longer at yesterday's wheat price."

The release said because of differences in marketing systems in Canada and the U.S. the officials were unable to agree on how to get a higher price for producers. "The U.S. people felt Canada should be ready to implement a production controol program in times of overabundance."

Barber predicted severe food shortages if farmers don't get real income and relief from having to live off inflated land values.

19 Indian constables graduate

REGINA (CP) — Nineteen Indian constables were graduated this week from the native tribal police training program at the RCMP training academy in Regina.

Graduates are not members of the RCMP, but will serve on Indian band forces in Alberta and Manitoba.

The tribal policing program was established after release of a 1973 federal government report on problems with police service on reserves.

Nine of the graduates are members of the Dakota Ojibway tribal force, which serves eight bands in southwestern Manitoba.

The rest are from Alberta, two from the Hobbema tribal police, six from the Blood tribal police and two from the Saddle Lake tribal police.

Higher crop payments forecast

WINNIPEG (CP) — Crop insurance payments to Manitoba farmers for the current fiscal year are likely to be substantially higher than last year, Agriculture Minister Jim Downey said.

The Manitoba Crop Insurance Corp. expects to pay farmers between $10 million and $12 million — or about double last year's claims—for crop losses covered by all-risk insurance contracts, he said.

Farmers have already been paid $8.5 million by the crop insurance corporation in the current fiscal year which ends March 31, Downey said.

Flooding last spring and late seeding are the major reasons for the higher payments.

NIP gets 25% more in Alberta

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta will receive a 25-percent increase this year in federal funding of the Neighborhood Improvement Program, federal and provincial ministers announced.

The province will receive $5 million under the program. The money will go into 66 communities.

Last year, 44 communities received grants. The program subsidizes community rehabilitation.

Below-average runoff expected

SASKATOON (CP) — Saskatchewan will have a below normal runoff this year, provincial hydrologist Ray Pentland said.

Pentland said the only part of the province where normal runoff is expected is the east-central region bordered by Saskatoon, Yorkton and Hudson Bay.

Runoff will be less because of the dry summer and fall last year and the below normal snow coverage now, he said.

Prison hostages released

MONTREAL (CP) — Two prison officials, held hostage for more than 48 hours at a maximum-security prison reception centre, were released unharmed, prison spokesman Robert Coallier said early today.

"The only demand we met was to give them a pizza," Coallier said after the hostage-taking ended at 1:45 a.m. EST at the Ste. Anne-des-Plaines centre, 50 kilometres north of Montreal.

The prisoners are to be tranferred to the special handling unit at the nearby Correctional Development Centre, he said. Asked how long they would be held under the "supermaximum" conditions of the special handling unit, Coallier said that "such transfers are constantly under study."

The hostage-takers, identified as Claude Charbonneau, 20, and Claude Montreuil, 23, had asked for food and an immediate transfer to adjacent Archambault Institute.

Coallier said their demand to see their lawyers would be met later today.

The two prisoners had been holed up in an office at the reception centre with prison officials Wilbrod Delisle and Leon Rivard. A third employee was released earlier.

Asked whether the two hostages had made any comment after their release, Coallier said he had not had a chance to talk with them.

The three prison workers were taken hostage at 11 p.m. EST Sunday.

The centre, which handles prisoners entering a federal penitentiary after they have been sentenced or violated parole, is part of a group of maximum- and medium-security institutions at the same location.

The hostage-takers, serving lengthy sentences for a variety of crimes, released guard Alain Gregoire early Monday after authorities granted their demands for access to a telephone.

The prisoners were said to be armed with crude metal picks.

Bus plunge kills 10

RIO DE JANEIRO (AFP) — Ten persons were killed and aother four were injured when a bus fell into the Bananal River near the town of Barra Mansa in the Rio de Janeiro state, it was announced.

Chamber goes hungry after restaurant rebels

ST. PAUL, Alta. (CP) — St. Paul, Alta., Chamber of Commerce members were turned away with empty stomachs from a dinner meeting after restaurant staff took exception to the chamber's criticism of local eateries.

The staff of the Habitat Inn refused to serve chamber members after a report of a previous meeting published in a local paper criticized St. Paul restaurants for their staff, menus and general service.

Lorraine Sagmeister, spokesman for six co-workers at the restaurant-hotel, said the article was a "putdown" of all workers in the industry.

Armed with signs and posters, she and other workers greeted chamber president Gerry Desaulniers, demanding an apology. The group was backed by hotel manager Jim Shupenia.

After the chamber was denied service, Desaulniers met with the restaurant staff in an attempt to sort out the dispute. He said the entire episode was a "matter of misinterpretation."

Police hunt clue to Que. bomb death

MONTREAL (CP) — Police sifted through debris in the downtown offices of a small vending machine company Tuesday in an effort to find clues to the early-morning bombing death of the firm's president.

Arnold Drapkin, 35, owner and president of Atlantic Vending Machines, was killed, and his cousin and another man were injured when a mailed parcel exploded as it was opened.

Constable Poxon said of radio reports that there might have been an "underworld" involvement in the bombing: "We need something a lot more solid before we can assume something like that."

CTV poll 'right on' with Grit majority forecast

By ROGER SMITH

TORONTO (CP) — A day after the Liberals rolled to a majority government, the sponsors of one public opinion poll were saying I told you so.

The CTV television network said the poll it conducted during the last week of the election campaign was almost right on, certainly well within its defined margin of error.

And after Monday's vote — the final and definitive test of public opinion in a campaign often dominated by polls — Gallup had no comment on why its final poll was out of line with election results.

The final CTV poll, broadcast Sunday, gave 43 per cent of the popular vote to the Liberals, 33 per cent to the Conservatives and 22 per cent to the New Democrats.

With all but a handful of polls reporting, the Liberals had 43.9 per cent, the Conservatives 33 per cent and the NDP 19.8 per cent.

The margin of error for CTV's sample of almost 2,000 voters is three percentage points either way.

Tim Kotcheff, CTV news director, said in a statement that the lead given the Liberals meant "anything less than a majority for the Liberals would have been unprecedented in modern times if their 10 points held on election day."

Kotcheff made the statement in response to those who said last weekend that the CTV poll results meant the election would be close and to a newspaper attack on CTV.

Based on early election returns which backed its claims, The Globe and Mail called the CTV "a big loser" because of its poll results. It also said in an editorial that "professional poll-taking influences our political life more than we like to admit."

Gallup's final poll, conducted early last week and published Saturday, gave the Liberals 48 per cent, the Tories 28 per cent, the NDP 23 per cent and other parties two per cent.

Gallup's sample size for its final poll was just over 2,000 so its margin of error should also be three percentage points. But a spokesman for the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion, which does the poll, said Gallup sticks with a four-percentage-point margin of error "because of difficulties with pre-election polls."

Even with the higher margin, Gallup was outside its limit for the Tory vote and just barely within it for the Liberals and the NDP.

Pollsters usually explain such discrepancies by claiming a shift in voter preference between the time of polling and election day or by pointing to the rider attached to its results which says polls of this size could be wrong once in 20 times.

The spokesman said Gallup would not comment on its performance until results had been analysed.

Polls played a particularly important role in this campaign because of the widely held belief that the Liberals helped defeat the Tory budget and force the election on the basis of published and private poll results giving them a massive 20 percentage-point lead over the Tories.

A Gallup poll two weeks before the election call put the Liberals 20-points ahead and the final poll gave them the same huge margin.

"On the surface at least, the election was over before it was called," Bill Neville, chief of staff for Prime Minister Clark, said Tuesday.

The Tories, in a last-ditch attempt last weekend to combat what they thought would be the negative impact of polls showing them so far behind, released private party polls showing they had made gains in key areas like B.C., Toronto and the rest of Ontario.

They also suggested their polls were more in line with CTV's and that a 10-point lead for the Liberals, taking into account the Liberals' huge bulge in Quebec which distorts national figures, meant the Tories still had a chance and that Liberals weren't certain majority winners.

Kotcheff said anyone who bought that interpretation made a mistake.

"The CTV poll of Feb. 17 correctly predicted the Liberal lead of 10 per cent," he said. "If one compares this to historical data, he finds that no party in the 14 elections since the CCF became a national party in 1935 has had a lead of 10 or more points and failed to win a majority."

Kotcheff blamed journalists for incorrectly interpreting poll results. This is the argument made by pollsters themselves. They say raw figures for popular vote cannot be translated easily into how many seats each party will win because increased support for a party might come in a riding or region where a party is already so far ahead or behind that more votes does not mean more seats.

In its final poll before the May 22 election, CTV predicted 40 per cent for the Conservatives and the Liberals and 17 per cent for the New Democrats. Gallup predicted 39 for the Liberals, 38 for the Tories and 16 for the NDP.

On election day, the Conservatives picked up 36 per cent of the votes across the country to 40 per cent for the Liberals, but won more seats because Liberal support was overwhelming in Quebec and Tory votes, though concentrated in the West, were spread more effectively.

The NDP got 18 per cent.

In 11 of the last 12 elections before Monday, Gallup has been within four points, most often within two points, on the popular vote for the two major parties.

In 1957, the final Gallup gave the Liberals a 14-point lead but the Tories came within two points on election day, giving them enough seats to form a minority government.

B.C. senators now in line for Trudeau cabinet posts

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Liberals say party leader Pierre Trudeau may have to take a leaf from Prime Minister Joe Clark's book and name senators to a new cabinet to provide western representation.

The Liberals were blanked west of the Manitoba border despite winning a majority government in Monday's federal election. In B.C., where the Liberals had expected to make gains, they lost the only seat they held among the province's 28 ridings.

The Conservatives won 16 seats in B.C. while the New Democrats took the remaining 12. Last May, the Conservatives won 19, the NDP eight and the Liberals one.

Appointment of western senators to a Trudeau cabinet is one way the problem might be redressed, some Liberals said Tuesday.

After last May's election, Clark tried to make up for his lack of French-speaking representation by appointing three senators — two from Quebec and one from Ontario — to his cabinet.

Senator George van Roggen, 58, a Vancouver lawyer appointed to the Senate by Trudeau in 1971, said Tuesday he did not want to speculate on what action the prime minister-elect would take.

The lack of representation from B.C. is "a serious situation and I'm sure Trudeau will face and deal with it in the best way possible."

Senator Ray Perrault, 54, a former MP and provincial Liberal leader, was a member of Trudeau's last cabinet by virtue of his position as government leader in the Senate. It is traditional that the Senate government leader is part of the cabinet.

Perrault said Trudeau might seek out B.C. senators to join the cabinet.

At present, B.C.'s six Senate seats are all filled, five by Liberals and one by independent Ed Lawson, Canadian president of the Teamsters' Union. Lawson's wife Doreen ran for the Liberals in Burnaby riding Monday but trailed both the New Democratic Party winner and the Progressive Conservative.

The other Liberal senators are Nancy Bell, 55, of Nanaimo, a former president of the B.C. Women's Liberal Association; Jack Austin, 47, a Vancouver lawyer and a former principal secretary to Trudeau; and Guy Williams, 73, of Richmond, B.C., a former president of the Native Brotherhood of B.C.

Trudeau could also widen his choice by using a section of the British North America Act, the basis of Canada's constitution, to appoint more senators from B.C., even though the present complement is filled. An alternative would be to tempt senators nearing the retirement age of 75 to quit early.

Normally, the number of Senate seats is 102, but the act allows a maximum of 110.

Meanwhile, in Victoria, Intergovernmental Relations Minister Garde Gardom has called on Pierre Trudeau to patriate the Canadian constitution as soon as possible so that it can be changed to provide for Western representation in his new Liberal government.

"I think there is a crying and continuing need for Canada to recognize the aspirations of its various regions," Gardom said Tuesday in an interview.

"It is distressing to me, and to all Canadians, to see that there is such an under-representation of the Prairie region and the Pacific region in the Liberal government of Mr. Trudeau, but this is a matter I am sure that he will be giving full cognizance to."

Gardom said there is a "compelling requirement upon the politicians in our country to grasp the nettle that they have really been unwilling to grasp — and that is the restructuring of the constitution of our country because it is not meeting the needs and aspirations of contemporary Canada."

NDP gains Socred slap?

NDP leader Dave Barrett refused to agree Tuesday that the party's federal gains in B.C. constitute a slap in the face for Social Credit and a personal victory for himself.

"I don't think it's automatic that federal and provincial votes transfer," Barrett said.

"It's difficult to totally predict the impact of last night's results."

Barrett went all-out campaigning for his federal colleagues around the province, but said he can't take any credit for the federal party's improved performance.

"Ed Broadbent did a terrific job campaigning in B.C. and that is reflected in the results," he said.

Barrett was cautiously optimistic about what the east-west split will mean to B.C.

"People may tend to view it too negatively," he said although the new Liberal government may find it must give greater attention to regional needs.

Barrett took a shot, however, at Premier Bill Bennett.

He said Bennett made a serious mistake when he failed to vote in the federal election.

"I think it shows a touch of cynicism to absent oneself from a federal vote when you're in public life," Barrett said.

Deputy-Premier Grace McCarthy said B.C. voters have sent a warning to Ottawa not to neglect western Canada.

"We are looking forward to very close attention from the Liberal government.

"They will be turning to us with a desire to take away the alienation felt in the West."

McCarthy said the Bennett government enjoyed good relations with the last Liberal administration in Ottawa and she expects the same with this one.

Trudeau's return batters PQ 'divided' theme

By DOMINIQUE CLIFT

MONTREAL (CP) — The return of Pierre Trudeau and the Liberals to power in Ottawa has knocked the props from under a key element in the Parti Quebecois's referendum campaign: The belief that Canada is hopelessly divided along ethnic lines, opposing French and English.

The Quebec government's official position paper on sovereignty-association, published last November, made the point that rhe French of Quebec can no longer expect to share the power of the federal government which is dominated by an English-speaking majority drawn from the rest of the country.

"On the contrary, they will find themselves more and more in a minority position, and it will become increasingly easy for English Canada to govern without them," says the document entitled The New Quebec-Canada Agreement. "In this respect the Clark government is far from being an anomaly. It is a portent of things to come."

However, the results of Monday's general elections make it difficult to maintain an analysis of Canadian politics where language and cultural divisions play a central role. The support received by Liberal Leader Pierre Trudeau, particularly in Ontario, makes this untenable.

The election results suggest that the economics of energy will become far more important than the politics of language on the national scene.

Furthermore, the appearance of profound divisions between Eastern and Western Canada should cast a new light on the constitutional debate which the new Liberal government in Ottawa is bound to revive.

The alleged animosity of English-speaking voters, particularly in Ontario and the West, towards Pierre Trudeau had been for some time a prominent element of the Parti Quebecois vision of Canadian politics and the new status which Quebec should seek to negotiate with the rest of the country.

When the Liberal leader announced last November that he would be stepping down, Premier Rene Levesque commented that this marked the end of French Power "for the foreseeable future within the context of Canadian federalism."

And Premier Levesque also said at that time: "It marks the end of the struggle and of those frenzied efforts to uphold a strong central government and its control over the country as a whole and over Quebec in particular."

The course of the referendum campaign in Quebec is sure to be affected by the attitudes displayed by the new governement in Ottawa on oil prices and by the budget which it must introduce soon in the House of Commons.

The nationalist grievances put forward by the Parti Quebecois could be overshadowed by the dependence of the provincial economy on a national energy policy, and by the willingness and ability of federal authorities to shelter Canadian consumers from international oil prices.

An open confrontation between Prime Minister-elect Trudeau and Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta would serve to dramatize the importance of the federal link for Quebec. In this way it would exert a considerable influence on the vote on sovereignty-association which is expected to be held next May or June.

The idea expressed by Premier Levesque when Joe Clark took power less than a year ago, according to which "each people made a choice which was clearly based on its own identity," is no longer tenable today.

Economic interests have now taken precedence over cultural identity, and this alone is enough to influence the referendum debate.

Tax hike fears cloud Que. business outlook

MONTREAL (CP) — Businessmen here have expressed satisfaction with the election of a majority federal government, but are worried about possible increases in corporate taxes as the Liberals look for an alternative to the Tories' proposed 18-cent increase in the gasoline excise tax.

"That revenue has to come from somewhere," the president of one large Montreal-based manfacturing firm said Tuesday.

"Corporate income taxes will likely be increased to make up for the revenue the government will lose by killing the gas tax."

John Bulloch, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, said he would accept a surcharge or a tax increase at the upper end of corporate rates because of the strong performances and high profits of companies during 1979.

But Pierre Laurin, director of Montreal's Ecole des Hautes Etudes Commerciales, said he would be surprised if the new government raised corporate taxes, explaining that the business community is "wary" of the Liberals.

"I do not see how they could feed the fire."

Recount ordered for Arctic

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — A recount has been ordered in the riding of Western Arctic after a request by New Democrat Wally Firth, who lost to Progressive Conservative Dave Nickerson by 31 votes in the federal election Monday.

Nickerson totalled 3,558 ballots to Firth's 3,527, with Liberal Gary Boyd tallying 3,424. A date for the recount has not been announced.

$301M B.C.Tel upgrading

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Telephone Co. plans to spend $301 million during 1980 on improvements to telecommunications facilities, Gordon MacFarlane, company chairman and chief executive officer, announced today.

MacFarlane said in a news release the company will spend about $25 million on installation of digital long-distance switching machines.

B.C. Tel will spend about $30 million on local switching installations to continue conversion to electronic switching.

More than $9 million will go to expansion of the province-wide microwave system, including B.C. Tel's first operational fibre optics system, he said.

MacFarlane said radio-telephone services will be expanded, at a cost of $4 million, and $4 million will be spent on continuation of a program to provide toll-free calling for people living in small rural communities dependent on a nearby larger centre for their basic needs.

Last year, the company began a five-year program to provide 76 rural communities with one-way, toll-free calling.

MacFarlane said that since 1977 when B.C. Tel had its last rate increase, shareholders have invested more than $660 million for capital additions to the telecommunications system. During the next five years capital expenditures planned by B.C. Tel and its affiliated companies are expected to exceed $1.6 billion.

As B.C. Tel enters the 1980s its advancement into digital communications continues with the installation of new switches in toll centres in the province, MacFarlane said.

Digital technology is a process by which any signal can be converted into the language of an electronic computer.

Major digital switches will be installed in New Westminster, downtown Vancouver, Kelowna, Prince George and Richmond.

Cartel papers stay secret

OTTAWA (CP) — Justice department lawyer T. B. Smith told the Supreme Court of Canada Tuesday it remains government policy not to release documents of an international uranium cartel of which Canada was a member from 1971 to 1975.

Smith rejected arguments of Gulf Corp. of the United States that any public interest in keeping the documents secret disappeared when the cartel broke up in 1975.

Smith said both the former Liberal cabinet of 1977, which passed orders making the documents secret, and the Joe Clark government took the view that it would not be in Canada's best interests to make the documents public. The order was passed to protect Canadian members of the cartel from anti-trust laws.

Gulf is under court orders from Michigan and California to produce the documents to back up its defence that its Canadian subsidiaries, Gulf Canada Ltd. and Gulf Minerals Ltd., took part in the cartel at the direction of the Canadian government.

That argument is crucial in defence claims amounting to about $6 billion brought against Gulf by Westinghouse Electric Corp., Gulf lawyers say.

The complicated legal action, which finds Gulf trapped between obeying either Canadian or American laws, started in the 1970s when the United States closed its borders to uranium imports. It then represented about 70 per cent of the free world market, thus confining Canada, Great Britain, South Africa, Australia and other uranium producers to only 30 per cent of the market.

Canada's first reaction was to stockpile uranium to save such communities as Elliot Lake in Ontario. When this proved successful, Canada joined other countries in a marketing arrangement which set prices and divided markets.

Rising world oil prices and higher prices for other forms of energy brought an end to the cartel's value in 1975.

However, Westinghouse in the lifetime of the cartel had sold numerous nuclear reactors to utility companies and guaranteed its customers nearly 80 million pounds of uranium at between $6 and $10 a pound.

By 1977 the price of uranium had shot to $40 a pound and Westinghouse had to default on his guaranteed low prices to its customers. They sued Westinghouse for billions of dollars for not living up to its contract with them.

Westinghouse in turn took Gulf to court, seeking to recover its legal costs from it.

The case continues today.

Consultants named soon on pool woes

The Juan de Fuca Recreation Commission soon will select a firm of consultants to develop a plan to replace or repair Centennial Pool and expand the existing recreation complex on the Island Highway in Colwood.

A short-list of four consultants has been selected and the commission hopes to name the winner within two or three weeks, recreation administrator Doug Ruttan told a commission meeting Tuesday.

Ruttan said he would like to see the decision made soon so plans can be completed and the question put to a referendum.

The pool has a ventilation problem that has caused humidity build-up and gradual rotting of the distinctive wood-frame roof.

The commission last January decided that extensive repairs, possibly involving complete demolition of the above-ground pool structure, might be necessary.

At the same time it wanted to expand the existing recreation complex which includes the pool, a curling rink, skating rink, lounge and banquet rooms and small meeting rooms. The expansion ideally would include a gym, racquet courts, fitness centre, additional meeting rooms and space to provide a "home" for the active Juan de Fuca Arts and Crafts Guild.

Drummond again heads recreation

Howard Drummond was unanimously re-elected Tuesday to his fourth term as chairman of the Juan de Fuca Parks and Recreation Commission.

Drummond, who sits on the commission in his role as Colwood's regional director, said the commission will have to work hard to deal with problems it has experienced in the past year.

The commission had a hectic year which included considering the need to replace the deteriorated Centennial Pool building, expanding the existing complex, dealing with complaints about management practices at the pool, and finally placing recreation administrator Doug Ruttan on six months probation.

Drummond said he's particularly concerned about finance and personnel work.

The commission's various committees will be required to meet at least once a month this year, he said, instead of the previous practice of meeting only when there was something to discuss.

Mac Tipton, Metchosin's regional director, was elected vice-chairman.

$33,000 budgeted for animal control

Animal control officer Bill Leach will get $33,360 in direct and indirect benefits under a $80,790 budget to be recommended to the Capital Regional Board.

The budget includes $22,160 for Leach's salary, $1,500 for overtime, a $1,500 travel allowance and $200 for a uniform.

In addition, the local works and services committee agreed Tuesday that $8,000 should be paid for office rental accommmodation for Leach in a two-storey Cape Cod-style house in the Mill Hill regional park in Langford.

The house was rented for $1,620 in 1979 but the parks budget, already approved by the parks committee, does not show any rental for this year.

Directors also discussed a proposed 25 per cent increase in the building inspection budget to $470,850.

In the proposed budget $108,000 is to go in the contingencies fund as compared to $4,000 last year. Salaries will increase from $206,570 to $247,740.

A total of $180,000 is expected from View Royal, most of that coming from permits for the new Helmcken Road hospital. Building permits from View Royal netted $23,000 in 1979.

The directors also approved a 25 per cent increase in the community planning budget. The budget goes to $431,640 from $360,375 last year.

Brochure to push tourism

The western communities of Langford, Colwood and Metchosin intend to do some self-promotion with a brochure for prospective visitors.

The Juan de Fuca Recreation Commission will spend about $1,000 this year to produce a brochure and distribute it to people interested in the community.

The brochure will feature the Juan de Fuca recreation complex but will also include information about local tourist and business services in the community.

Rate freeze plea on deaf ears

Capital Regional Board director Howard Drummond wants a freeze on B.C. Hydro's seven per cent rate hike but he shouldn't hold his breath.

Energy Minister Bob McClelland said Tuesday the Hydro increases — which go into effect April 1 — won't be reviewed by the new B.C. Utilities Commission, a clear indication that Drummond's plea will not get very far.

McClelland said the commission will not be in operation until after the April increases take effect and consequently will not be in a position to assess the new rates which Hydro maintains are necessary to encourage energy conservation.

Effective April 1, CRD taxpayers must start to pick up the tab for public transit deficits through a three-cent-a-gallon surcharge on gasoline and also begin paying the seven-per-cent Hydro rate increase.

But Drummond, the director for Colwood, says the proposed increase should be reviewed.

"I think it's a bit ridiculous to go ahead with increases at the present time," he said.

Once the transit losses are removed from Hydro, the new increases will push the Crown corporation's income up by about $132 million, Drummond said.

The provincial government has decreed that the transit deficit should be paid either through the surcharge on gasoline and diesel fuel, a hike in Hydro charges or increased property taxes.

Residents, however, are already underwriting transit deficits through Hydro charges and, theoretically at least, transfer of transit responsibility should have resulted in reduced Hydro rates.

Drummond said Hydro will start saving $62 million a year when the CRD and the Greater Vancouver Regional District take over responsibility for public transit, as ordered by the provincial government.

When the provincial government decided in 1978 to shunt responsibility for public transit to the regional boards there was talk of reduced Hydro rates.

Opening lead — two of diamonds.

you could never predict what Sylvia would do in a given situation. It wouldn't matter whether the question arose during the bidding or the play — it was simply impossible to foretell her reaction with any degree of certainty.

Undoubtedly her approach in either department of the game seemed normal to her, since — according to her lights — everything she did was perfectly logical. But — judging from how other members of the club bid, played and reacted — Sylvia's approach to the game was highly eccentric and strikingly unconventional.

Furthermore, Sylvia, who was by nature accident-prone, occasionally made errors which were not really the product of her fertile mind, but were simply mechanical errors that she committed unintentionally. These inadvertent mistakes certainly did not help her in the long run, but there were occasions when she would profit unexpectedly by her blunders.

Consider this deal where Sylvia got to six hearts on the bidding shown. Her cause seemed hopeless from the time dummy came down but, as usual, Sylvia plodded on, hoping that some miracle would occur. And it did.

Sylvia took the diamond lead with the ace, drew trumps, and played a club to the king. She then cashed the ace of clubs, intending to discard a diamond on it, but somehow, to her utter dismay, she saw that she had inadvertently discarded the ace of spades!

Undaunted, Sylvia trumped a club, thus establishing the suit, and then led a spade towards dummy's queen. West had no choice but to win with the king and return a spade to the queen, so the outcome was that Sylvia made six hearts as the result of her spectacular discard of the ace of spades.

City seeks relaxed fire code

The city will ask the B.C. government soon for a major relaxation of building and fire codes to allow the renovation of scores of older commercial buildings in Victoria.

Ald. Bob Wright said Tuesday that strict requirements governing safety, fire and earthquake hazards work against the preservation of many heritage buildings.

It is impossible to bring them up to modern standards without destroying the historic character of the buildings, he said.

The land-use planning and zoning committee voted Tuesday to ask the minister of municipal affairs for special powers that would give the city more room to manoeuvre in this area.

Wright proposes that the province amend the National Building Code to provide greater flexibility in meeting the standards when owners renovate older buildings designated heritage by the city.

Council would also have the discretionary power to waive certain requirements that would otherwise prevent a heritage-style restoration or maintenance work that would keep an older building in good condition, appropriate to the period it was built.

The third item on the alderman's list is the establishment of an advisory committee to city council consisting of the fire chief, the city's chief building inspector, an architect and a professional engineer.

This group of technical experts would advise on individual applications by building owners for relaxation of the building codes.

Wright cited two heritage projects which have been stymied by the codes. Higgins Hall at Fort and St. Charles — the first house designated heritage by the city — was to become a costume museum, but fire regulations prevented it.

The fire marshal wanted three-quarters of an inch of fire retardant material on the plaster-lath ceilings and walls, which still have the original wallpaper, and the magnificent open staircase and balcony had to be closed in by a fire wall before the public could be allowed in.

In the other case, a group of architects wanted to restore as offices an old building in Chinatown on Fan Tan Alley. The fire marshal approved the plans with one condition — as long as the narrow passage which connects Pandora and Fisgard was widened to 28 feet to allow fire trucks through.

"You can imagine what that would do to Fan Tan Alley," Wright said.

Ald. Bill McElroy said another example was Quonley's grocery store at Fisgard and Government. The building was renovated after a fire a year ago, but the floors above street level remain vacant. They can't be used for apartments because the construction doesn't meet the code.

Wright said there are many buildings in Chinatown and Old Town where the upper floors are vacant for the same reason. It's too expensive to renovate and meet the codes.

"Once you open that can of worms it leads to the poorhouse."

He said he wanted to move quickly because of reports that the provincial government plans to bring in legislation this spring to amend the building code in this area.

Housing, park at end of Rainbow

A compromise over the Rainbow property in Victoria West which will see low density housing and a waterfront park share the 2.8-acre city-owned site was reached at city hall Tuesday.

Zoning on the land at the foot of Robert Street — bought from the Navy League of Canada in 1974 for $381,000 — will be reduced to R-J duplex zoning which will allow only 21 units in clusters of four.

Council's land-use planning committee voted for chairman Ald. Bob Wright's suggestion to change a city staff recommendation for R-K zoning, which would have permitted a maximum of 26 townhouses.

Grant Keddie, president of the Vic West Community Development Association, and other residents of the neighborhood showed up to protest any housing at all on the site, but Keddie appeared happy with the compromise.

The general feeling in Vic West is for a park on the entire site, but Keddie said "we realize that would be a tremendous cost.

"That agreement is the best we could hope for."

The committee voted two weeks ago to use most of the property for housing, keeping about 1.2 acres for a waterfront park and a road connecting Robert and Russel streets.

Ald. Bill McElroy said that 30 per cent of the 1.7-acre housing development would still be green space, blending in with the park.

"It won't be an overpowering type of development."

But he noted that the city is "going to take a kicking" when it sells the housing site. Downzoning means the maximum price it can expect is probably around $420,000. Considering inflation and interest rates, it's a loss on the price paid six years ago.

"Somebody told me a few years ago that this is not a profit-making organization," replied Wright. "I think it was you."

Ald. Ken Sinclair pointed out that the cost of the new park is the difference. Victoria will break even on the land sale and get the park free, he said.

Jim Lee, who has restored a 75-year-old house at 223 Robert, later designated heritage by city council, wrote to the city's heritage advisory committee on Monday complaining of the housing proposal.

There are only 19 single family homes left south of Esquimalt Road with four in the Rainbow area of heritage quality, Lee said. A modern townhouse project will ruin the character of the neighborhood.

More piecemeal education predicted

By AB KENT

Camosun College chairman Janet Baird — elected to a fourth term Tuesday — sees a greater tendency towards "piecemeal" education and a new opportunity for community colleges.

During a discussion of a proposed downtown regional education centre, Baird said for many people holding full-time jobs, working wives and mothers and students under social and economic pressures, attending classes fulltime will become more difficult in the next decade.

"I think more people will be getting an education piecemeal than ever before," Baird said.

Even attending night classes will be difficult for some people, and for them, convenient downtown locations to take some classes will be a great help, she said.

Bair said if Camosun joins the University of Victoria and the Open Learning Institute in setting up an educational counselling centre where students may also register for courses and take some classes, it will be a great service to the region.

Curtis Purden, chairman of the Camosun facilities committee, wondered if the centre would duplicate services.

He estimated that at commercial rates of $8 a square foot, rental might cost $100,000 a year.

Purden urged less haste, pointing out that the western community and Saanich Peninsula also need servicing.

The facilities committee was given the task of examining the proposal, including the broader subject of community college extension in the region.

Camosun principal Lloyd Morin said not many people find the Lansdowne campus, where counselling, registration and most classes are held, is convenient.

The downtown area, however, presents a face-to-face contact for people who are there for the working day.

BAIRD
. . . heads Camosun again

An administration brief said a downtown location could offer classes an hour before work, two hours after work and during the period from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The OLI is going to open a Victoria region office and tutoring centre regardless of Camosun's action, and UVic agrees with the need for a more central place to give noon-hour and late afternoon courses.

Win Mott agreed a public service should be located at the greatest concentration of people.

"The essence of a community college is that it's out there where the people are."

Mike Hutchison said most people are too busy at work to attend classes, and that the education ministry, not the college, had the mandate to provide adult education.

"Has the matter been discussed with the ministry?" he asked.

Morin said there had been discussion with ministerial staff but not with the provincial granting council.

It had been suggested funds for a trial operation could come from surpluses of previous years.

Lois Walsh, representing newly-admitted School District 63, said she would like a committee to discuss the matter before the board acts.

DUNCAN — The Cowichan Valley Regional Board has refused a religious order permission to build a monastery here.

The Apostles of Infinite Love, a group that broke with the Catholic Church over modernization policies, was denied permission to have its property changed from agricultural to institutional classification.

The board made its decision on the recommendation of its public hearing committee which was opposed "on the basis of public input and the nature of the project to date."

Main area of conten[illegible] in addition to protests from residents — was that the monks went ahead and laid footings for the cross-shaped building without permission.

The regional district issued a stop-work order on Jan. 29.

Beetle battle joined

The battle of the beetle has resumed in southeastern B.C.

In a statement loaded with military terminology, the B.C. Forest Service today announced the start of the spring campaign against the mountain pine beetle in the forests of the East Kootenay.

"Forest Service and logging company strategists in the Nelson forest region have gained a toe-hold in the endless war," tells the dispatch from the front lines.

"A multi-pronged battle plan" has been worked out and loggers have "swung into action" to begin salvage of 30,000 acres of infested lodge-pole pine, twice as much as was salvaged last year.

The enemy is an insect about seven milimeters long. It bores tunnels into pine trees, laying eggs and leaving a blue-stained fungus while choking off the trees' food supply.

The beetles have invaded 500,000 acres in the Nelson forest region and another 1.5 million acres are threatened.

Hardest hit are the Golden, Invermere and Cranbrook districts.

The value of infested trees in the region has been estimated at $700 million.

The emergency tree harvest, while essential to control the bugs, could force cutbacks in future timber supplies to saw mills, forest ministry officials said.

The beetles have also infiltrated the Boundary Forest district around Grand Forks and have sent advance units into the Prince George region.

South of the border, 1.4 million acres are infested.

U.S. Federal Forest Service officials say commercial timber worth millions of dollars is dying in eight national forests in Montanna and Idaho.

Railways' plea fails

VANCOUVER (CP) — The railway committee of the Canadian transport commission has turned down an appeal by Canadian National Railways and CP Rail against a ruling favoring B.C. pulp shippers.

The commission also refused an application by the railways for a stay in the roll-back of rates until their appeal has been carried to the Federal Court of Appeal.

Taking potshots at a neighbor's dog doesn't exactly fit the image of a guy who gets high on Rocky Mountain wildlife — and John Denver says he's sorry he did it. He broke up an argument between his dog and another by shooting the intruder with an air rifle. His Aspen, Colo., neighbors are up in arms and Denver now says, "It was a stupid thing to do." Animal control officer Lisa Russell agrees — says if it happens again she'll slap him with a charge.

Denver

First, it was revealed that Greta Garbo spied for the British during the Second World War. Now, author William Stevenson has added David Niven, Myrna Loy and Vera Lynn to the list. Stevenson tells the Toronto Star the famed agent codenamed "Intrepid" — later portrayed by Niven in a movie — worked with the now 74-year-old Miss Garbo to smuggle physicist Neils Bohr out of occupied Denmark. Bohr later became a key scientist in development of the atomic bomb.

The Ladies' Home Journal says Caroline Kennedy has a boyfriend — one who says he's in love with her, but who won't discuss the possibility of marriage. He's 31-year-old New York freelance writer Tom Carney — quoted as saying, "the whole interest in Caroline and me on the part of the press has been stressful." At least he's in solid with 22-year-old Caroline's mother. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis introduced them and recently tried to help Carney sell a screenplay.

Mark Thatcher — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's 26-year-old race car-driving son — won't promote Japanese textiles after all. He says he's also turned down a $60,000 deal from London's "strip king," Paul Raymond, publisher of Men Only magazine. Young Thatcher's deal with the Japanese enraged workers in England's depressed textile industry and Thatcher said then he was ready to leave England forever. But he's decided to race with a British team instead.

The Pointer Sisters may as well make a vacation of it. Their tour of Sweden was over before it began. The U.S. vocal group came to Stockholm with a six-piece band for a concert tour arranged by long-time fan and part-time promoter Peter Carlsson, but ticket sales for their main concert fell flat so the whole tour was cancelled.

Dear Abby:

Why is so much emphasis placed on sex these days? Sex is just a function. Some require more than others and a lot hardly ever think about it.

Today, everywhere you look you see articles and books telling you how to have "good" sex. There are even therapists to teach people how to do something that comes naturally when two people love each other. My sainted mother would turn over in her grave if she knew that people actually go to specialists to get instructions.

Let's be realistic, Abby. The average person falls in love once (maybe twice) in a lifetime. Unfortunately, some people never fall in love, but they find other things in life that are equally fulfilling and rewarding.

If we stopped talking about sex so much, we'd have fewer hookers, rapists and sex-crazies.

Levelheaded

Dear Levelheaded:

Wrong! Hookers have always been with us. (Isn't prostitution known as the oldest profession?)

And it's time that myth about rape is put to rest. The rapist is more interested in degrading and humiliating women than he is in achieving sexual gratification.

Finally, sex between two people who love each other does not always insure mutual satisfaction nor does it come naturally. Our early training has conditioned many of us to regard sex as nasty and sinful. But thanks to therapy ("lessons," if you will), we can be taught to overcome our inhibitions and hangups, and enjoy sex without guilt.

Dear Abby:

I am a 31-year-old woman, divorced for four years, and have no children.

The man I've been dating for five months has asked me to marry him. He has already bought the ring. I told him I wanted to wait until I know him better. I think I love him, but I want to be sure my feelings are real.

There are a few things about him that bother me. He is 27, and has had only one semester of college. This certainly isn't going to set well with my family because we are all college graduates and have professions. The age difference isn't going to set too well with them either.

He is mature, responsible, hard-working and earns $35,000 a year, but it's only a job — not a profession.

My parents have met him once, briefly, and they don't now he's only 27, and not a college graduate.

Something else bothers me: I don't like the ring he bought for me.

Virgo

Dear Virgo:

Don't say yes until you don't give a hoot what your family thinks about his age, his non-professional job, or anything else. And should you ever reach that point, if the ring still bothers you enough to influence your decision — say no!

Lamb lauded for all seasons

By PAT DUFOUR

From now on, every time I see New Zealand lamb in a store I'll think of that country's counterpart to Julia Child.

She's Mrs. Alison Holst, a vivacious mother of two teenagers, who's been hosting a television cooking program for the past 15 years.

In 1965, when her shows started, television was still a novelty in New Zealand. There was only one channel and that was on only during the evening hours.

Holst is on a North American tour, promoting New Zealand lamb, and her enthusiasm is infectious.

She has written 10 books, the latest being Lamb for All Seasons. The book contains her choice of more than 1,000 lamb recipes sent in to the New Zealand Meat Board in a national competition.

Believe it or not, she tested every one before making her final choice.

"My family ate lamb twice a day for three months and my neighbors' freezers soon became full as well," she recalls.

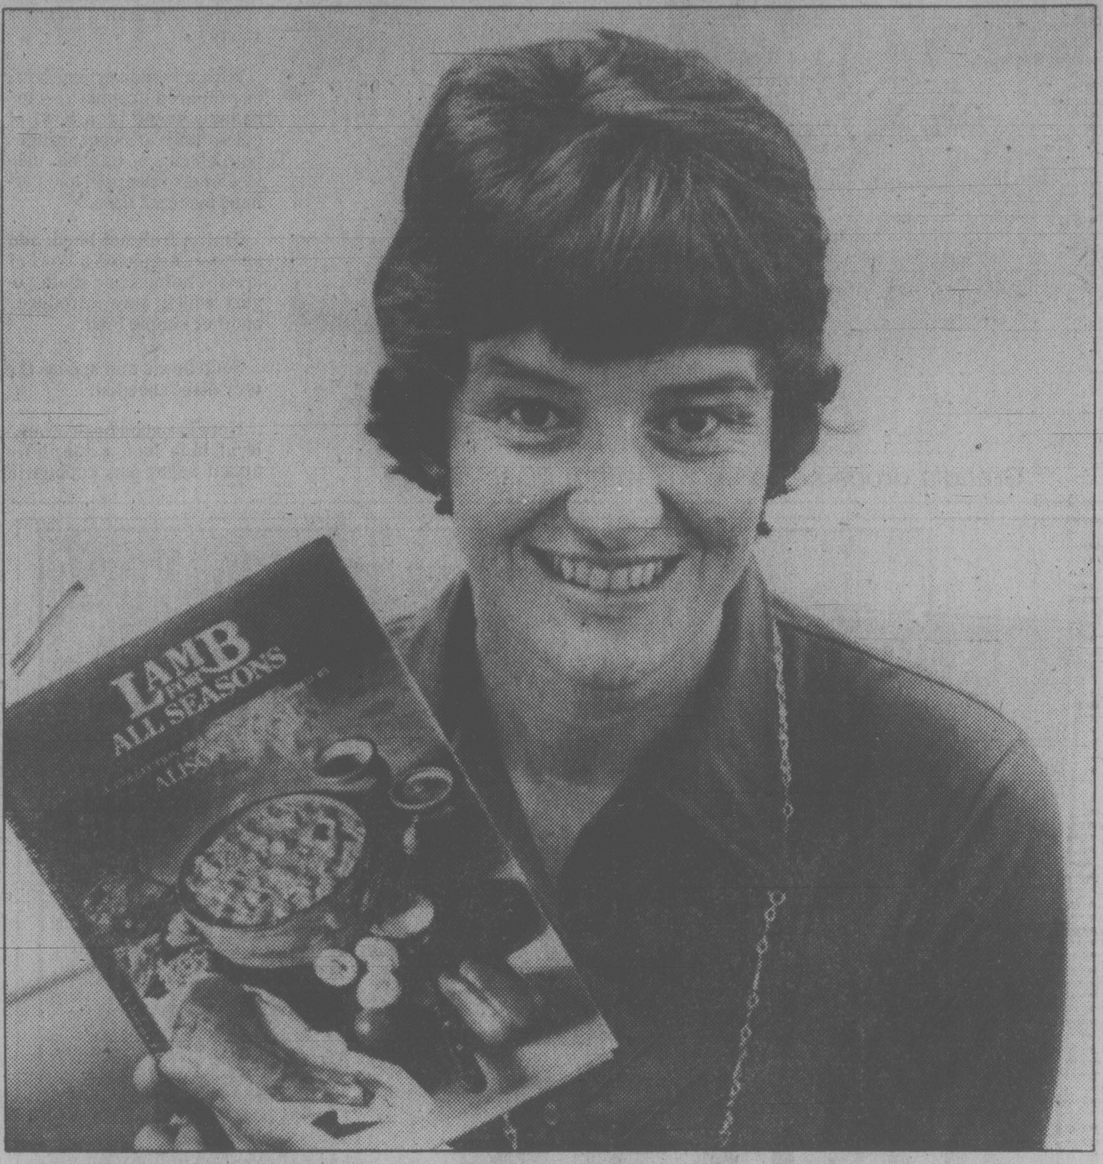
Not only did her family act as guinea-pigs for the national contest, the Holst children — Kirsten, 16, and 13-year-old Simon — have also taken to the air with their famous mother. "They've appeared 32 times with me on programs based on cooking for teenagers...and they liked it."

Holst agrees that the looks of a fresh juicy roast are hard to beat and that frozen cuts of lamb are not apt to create excitement over the esthetics. But, she says, we're getting the cream of the crop, or should it be flock?

The official definition of lamb is young sheep under a year old and the prime product is killed when the animal is between four and six months old, most of it being frozen and shipped to overseas markets.

By chance, I bought a New Zealand leg of lamb a few weeks ago and have to agree the meat was both tender and succulent.

Next time I get another leg of lamb I intend trying one of Holst's favorite recipes. Here it is:-



Alison Holst is New Zealand's answer to Julia Child

CRUSTY LEG OF LAMB WITH ORANGE SAUCE

This leg is boned, filled with an orange-flavored stuffing, then baked with a crisp crumb coating. The brown sauce has the tang of orange juice and red currant jelly.

Leg of lamb
2 onions
1 carrot
¼ teaspoon mixed herbs seasoned flour
dry breadcrumbs
1-2 tablespoons red currant jelly

STUFFING
1 small onion, chopped
1-2 tablespoons butter
1 cup soft breadcrumbs
1 teaspoon mixed herbs
1 orange, grated rind and juice salt and pepper
1 egg, beaten.

Bone the leg of lamb or ask the butcher to do so. Make stock by boiling bones from leg with one onion, carrot, ¼ teaspoon mixed herbs and water to cover for 1-2 hours. Strain.

Make stuffing by cooking a finely chopped onion in butter until transparent but not brown. Remove from heat, add breadcrumbs, herbs orange rind, salt and pepper. Moisten with half the beaten egg and enough orange juice to bind.

Spread over the inside of the boned leg and tie securely with string.

Roll in seasoned flour, then brush with the remaining beaten egg. Roll in dry breadcrumbs.

Roast, uncovered, at 300 degrees Fahrenheit for 1½ hours. When cooked, remove string and keep warm.

Tip off most of the fat from the pan drippings. Add remaining onion, finely chopped, and cook until transparent. Add 3-4 tablespoons of flour (or left-over seasoned flour), stir until brown, then add red currant jelly, stock and remaining orange juice. Simmer for five minutes, then season and strain.

Serve with baked potatoes, topped with sour cream, creamed spinach and minted carrots.

Another recipe, Honey-Glazed Lamb with Red Currant Sauce, is highly recommended by Holst. In this recipe mustard, honey and rosemary form a golden brown crust. If you prefer a darker sauce you can reduce the sauce in the roasting pan after the meat, and any fat, have been removed from it.

HONEY GLAZED LAMB WITH RED CURRANT SAUCE

Leg of lamb
pepper
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon mustard
2 tablespoons honey
1 teaspoon dried rosemary
¼ cup red currant jelly
½ orange, grated rind and juice
¼ cup dry white wine
1 cup chicken stock
2 tablespoons finely chopped mint
2 tablespoons cream

Thaw lamb. Wipe with a clean damp cloth and trim off any loose fat. Rub with pepper, salt and mustard. Stand meat on rack in roasting pan containing one cup of water. Roast at 325 degrees Fahrenheit for 2½ hours.

Brush leg with honey, sprinkle with rosemary and cook 30 minutes longer.

To make sauce, heat together in medium-sized saucepan the red currant jelly, orange juice and grated rind, wine and stock until reduced to half the volume.

Add chopped mint and cream, and adjust seasoning.

This recipe is good served with small new potatoes, baby marrows and carrots.

Shish kebabs are another favorite of Holst because they cook so quickly. She does hers under the broiler.

SHISH KEBABS

If your shish kebabs are cooked indoors, line the grill pan with foil to make cleaning-up easier.

1 pound lamb, cubed
12 small onions, parboiled
4 firm tomatoes, quartered
2 tablespoons plum jam
MARINADE:-
1 tablespoon oil
½ cup dry white wine
2 teaspoons lemon juice or cider vinegar
1 teaspoon soya sauce

Mix ingredients for marinade. Turn lamb in this and leave for two hours. Thread meat on four skewers, alternating meat with onions and tomatoes. Cook over a barbecue or under a grill, turning several times.

Mix jam with remaining marinade and brush over kebabs at least twice after meat is partly cooked. Serve with bread rolls and tossed salad.

N.B. Use frozen New Zealand boneless leg or shoulder of lamb. Thaw thoroughly.

Finally, Holst recommends a lamb curry recipe that is a favorite in her country.

LAMB CURRY

2 pound lamb, cut from leg
2 ounces butter
1 cup plain yogurt
2 tablespoons curry powder
3 onions
1 clove garlic
2 sticks celery
2 cups stock
1 banana
2 tablespoons chutney

Cube lamb and fry in butter for five minutes. Remove from pan and mix with yoghurt and curry powder.

Slice and fry onions, garlic and celery. Stir in the stock and simmer for 45 minutes or until meat is tender.

Add sliced banana and chutney. Cook slowly for a further 15 minutes. Season carefully.

Serve on saffron rice, garnished with sliced banana and gherkin and accompany with side dishes of chutney, pineapple and ginger.

Female cancer curbs much improved

By DR. L. L. COLEMAN

The year 1979 was significant in the development of new techniques that will markedly benefit women everywhere. In a recent edition of the excellent magazine, The Female Patient, many hopeful evidences of progress were demonstrated.

Dr. Philip Di Saja, of the University of California College of Medicine, in Irvine, says, "Very impressive results have been achieved in the past few years in the treatment of malignant tumors of the ovary in young women. The combination of chemotherapy (drugs), used in the post-operative period, has dramatically altered the life expectancy of these patients."

In addition, the use of immunotherapy demonstrates great promise in the treatment of these and related types of tumor.

Dr. Di Saia further states, "It looks like the eradication of cancer of the cervix of the uterus as a cause of death among young women is within our grasp."

Depression is a common symptom. Family physicians estimate that 30 percent of all their patients present evidence of depression. Sometimes this is masked by the statement, "I'm tired, I have no energy" or "I'm just a bundle of nerves."

Dr. Roland R. Fieve, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia University in New York, is recognized as one of the most knowledgable doctors in the understanding and treatment of depression. He is particularly interested in the use of the drug, "lithium" for cases of severe depression.

Many other anti-depressant drugs exist. Careful study of each individual patient must be made before choosing the ideal drug. The remarkable advances in drug therapy have lifted the veil of depression in many women and have liberated them from the devastating effect of such depression.

New solutions to infertility have become more apparent in the last few years. Dr. Sherwin A. Kaufman, director of the Infertility Clinic in New York City, says, "Thirty years ago, when I first began to practice, the problem of infertility, a medical stepchild at the time, could be solved in only about 25 per cent of the cases. Today, the success rate has at least doubled and, in certain instances, almost tripled. This is good news for the 15 per cent of couples who cannot conceive... Ovulation problems are now amenable to specific treatment."

Drugs and hormones have been important contributions in the conversion of infertile patients to fertile ones. Microsurgical techniques, too, have added considerably to the solution of these problems.

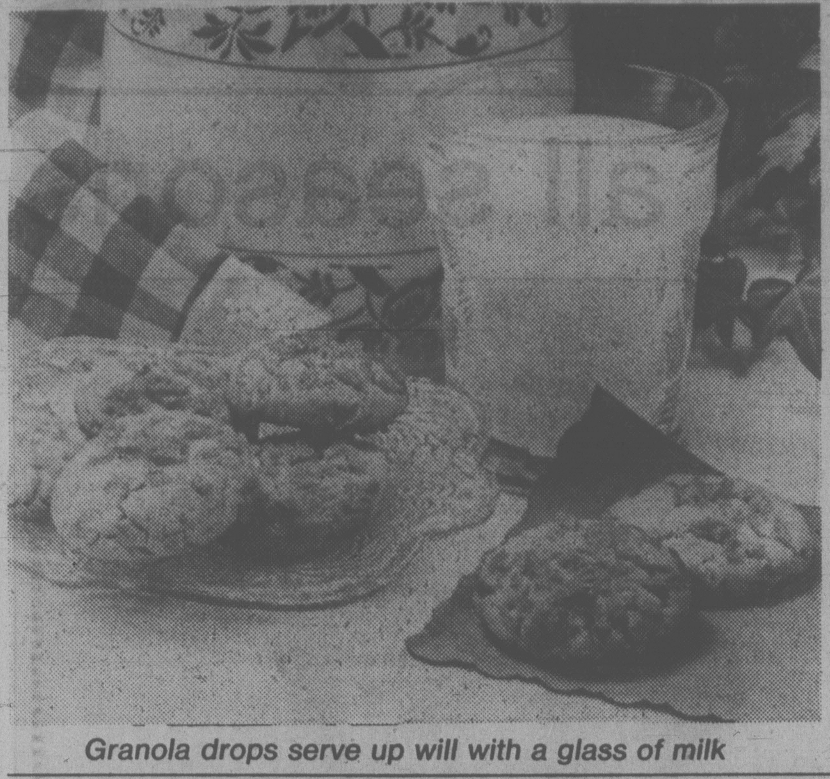
A get-together with granola



Granola drops serve up will with a glass of milk

hilda beastall

Homemade granola is a popular food in many homes but until a week ago I hadn't heard of giving what might be called a Granola Party. The idea is worth passing on. There are corn roasts, dessert parties, and barbecues. What better than a Granola Party?

With a large serving bowl of prepared granola (recipe below), would be a bowl of cut sections of sweet oranges with chunks of banana, unsweetened pineapple and perhaps pieces of date.

Omit a fruit not liked; add another. And have a bowl of low-fat homemade plain yogurt which may introduce another simple food.

Soup bowls and spoons the only dishes needed.

Here is a good basic granola of high food value, little added sugar but enough in the flakes and other grains used. The mix is economical enought for daily use in families and ideal for those living alone who enjoy nourishing food without lengthy preparation at each meal.

Before starting the granola mixing, check recipe to see that all ingredients are on hand. Some may be new to you, but all have many uses in a home where food is prepared from basics. Replace or increase one item in the grain list if out of another item.

GRANOLA MIX

250 mL	wheat flakes
250 mL	oat flakes
250 mL	barley flakes
250 mL	tricale flakes OR use rye flakes
125 mL	wheat germ
125 mL	wheat bran (bulk, not pkg.)
60 mL	rice polishings
60 mL	soy grits
250 mL	skim milk powder
125 mL	ground raw peanuts OR sunflower seeds
1 mL	salt
30 mL	brown sugar OR blackstrap molasses
60 mL	soft margarine OR oil
60 mL	warm water (approx.)

Mix all dry ingredients in bowl or pan.

Combine sugar or molasses, salt, oil or margarine, with warm water. Stir well to mix.

Dribble over dry ingredients in bowl; stir to coat all the grains.

Spread half-inch deep in one or two shallow pans. Rinse molasses cup with a little more water to remove oil and molasses. Dribble over mixture.

Bake in slow oven about 250 deg. F. (120 deg. C.) until fairly dry and slightly browned. It may take two hours, more or less, so plan a baked rice pudding in the same oven, a bean casserole, or other baking that will cook at same temperature. This is using fuel carefully, lowering the end cost of producing meals at home.

Stir occasionally to mix. Sides and corners brown first. Cover loosely with foil if necessary. Let cool, stirring often.

Store in covered jars. Makes 8 metric measuring cups.

Use granola either dry with fruit and yogurt on the side, or a quarter cupful in a cereal bowl topped with milk, fruit juice and yogurt. Either way granola is delicious; it needs chewing, and the liquid is needed either with the granola or afterwards.

Should by some mischance you find an empty jar when wanting a granola meal or snack, a quick supply can be prepared in 20 minutes.

Quick Granola in Skillet:

50 mL sunflower oil or soft margarine in skillet; meanwhile mix one quarter portions of ingredients listed above, omitting the oil and water.

Stir mixture into hot oil until coated; stir and toss for 15 minutes at low heat.

Use amount required, hot, with fruit, yogurt and milk. Cool remainder and store. It will taste a little different, but is good when needing a quick emergency quantity.

The batch of dry granola in a jar is very handy to add to a quick drop cookie mixture when oven is being used for only 15 minutes or so in heating or browning a casserole or something similar.

GRANOLA DROPS

60 mL	soft margarine
50 mL	sugar
1	small egg
50 mL	water
250 mL	whole wheat flour
50 mL	skim milk powder
1 mL	baking soda
4 mL	baking powder
1 mL	salt
200 mL	homemade dry granola (cooked)

Cream margarine with sugar in bowl. Add egg, beat well with spoon. Add water.

Measure into sifter the next 5 dry ingredients; add to egg mixture and mix well. Stir in dry granola.

Drop in small heaps on greased cookie tray.

Bake at moderate heat 190 deg. C. for about 12 minutes. Don't allow to scorch on under sides. Makes 36 cookies, very crunchy and good.

Homemade granola is also good as a topping pressed down on thawed of frozen berries for a special good dessert. Needs only 12 to 15 minutes in oven. Watch that top does not scorch. Again, a loose foil cover may be useful to keep in moisture, prevent burning and yet preserve some of the crispness.

Once you make granola at home and enjoy the fine flavors of the grains without the masking of an overall sweetness, you will find many other time-saving and economical ways to use this food. You too may want to introduce it to your friends at a Granola Party.

Eating 'tween seasons

Some meals are particularly right for summer — iced drinks, large salads, cold meats, corn on the cob and so forth. And there are meals one associates with winter — steaming soups, large roasts, heaps of potatoes.

But what do you do while the seasons are changing? How do you plan a dinner when you're subjected to the uncertainties of autumn or the vagaries of spring, those awkward days when the weatherforecasters are using words like "variable" and "mixed" and "partially"?

Well, each dish tonight has one quality in common. No, two qualities. In the first place, each dish tastes good. Secondly, each dish tastes good — whether it's served ice cold or piping hot. Or, for that matter, lukewarm.

Tonight, the all-temperature dinner.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: olive oil, lemons, soy sauce, mayonnaise, salt, pepper, tarragon, thyme, garlic, butter, curry powder, coffee, rum, milk, sherry.

The Shopping List: one five-to-six-pound loin of pork (have your butcher bone it and tie it); small jar of currant jelly; rice; one green pepper; one small can of water chestnuts; four leeks; five artichokes; one bunch scallions; one medium onion; one cucumber; three pounds potatoes; two cups light cream; two small cans chicken broth; chives; parsley.

Let's assume the weather forecaster is waffling today. While tonight's meal can be reheated and served hot, it is normally — and to best advantage — served cold. In which case the entire meal should be prepared in advance.

MENU

Vicyssoise
Artichokes
Loin of Pork
Rice Salad
Cafe Rhum

Beginning With the Vichyssoise. Wash the leeks carefully under cool running water.. (Danger! Very carefully. For some reason, leeks attract more sand then your average beach.)

Slice the whites of the leeks — only the whites — and put these into heavy pot with a half stick of butter. Add the onion, peeled and chopped. Cook over a medium heat for five to 10 minutes, until the onion begins to turn translucent. Peel the potatoes, slice them and add the slices to the pot. Also add the cans of chicken broth. Bring all this to a boil; then immediately reduce heat to low. Simmer for somewhat less than an hour.

When mixture has cooled, run it through the blender. What you have now might be called vichyssoise concentrate. Store it in the refrigerator, and just before serving, mix in 1½ cups of light cream. If soup still seems too thick, it can be thinned with chicken broth, light cream or milk. Each serving — whether it be hot or cold — should be topped with freshly ground pepper and a scattering of chopped chives.

Next, the Artichokes. There should be directions for eating, not cooking, artichokes. Cut off stems and stand the artichokes up on their bottoms in a pot of water over medium-high heat. Cook until tender — oh, 45 minutes or slightly more. Then turn them upside-down to drain. Serve them with a dip and with a separate plate for discarded leaves.

Remove one leaf at a time and dip the meaty end of the leaf into a sauce and the feathery portion above the artichoke heart should be removed and discarded. The heart is then cut into small pieces, dipped and eaten.

If the artichoke is to be served hot, I like a dip of melted butter with a squeeze of lemon. If cold, try mayonnaise with a dash of curry powder.

Moving Right Along to the Loin of Pork. The pork loin is marinated overnight in a half cup of oil, a half cup of sherry, a quarter cup of soy sauce, a pinch of thyme, and three cloves of garlic, chopped. Turn the meat over several times in the marinade.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Allow plenty of roasting time — about 30 minutes for each pound of pork. While roast is cooking, baste it several times with marinade.

Heat currant jelly in small saucepan over medium-high heat until it bubbles. Add four tablespoons of marinade and cook for a few more minutes. Coat pork with mixture when cooking is complete.

You can then — depending on your mood or the mood of the weather — serve it hot (good), cold (better) or warm (best).

Now, the Rice Salad. Cook one cup of dry rice according to the directions on the box. Add one green pepper, chopped fine. And a chopped cucumber and a small can of water chestnuts, sliced. Also a bunch of scallions, chopped.

Make a salad dressing from a third of a cup of olive oil, three tablespoons of lemon juice, salt and pepper, a large pinch of minced parsley and a small pinch of tarragon. Toss with the rice mixture.

And Finally, the Coffee with Rum. You mix each cup of coffee with a jigger of rum and two jeggers of cream. And serve it hot. Or cold. Or whatever.

Simplest chocolate mousse ever calls for 1½ cups semi-sweet chocolate chips, 2 eggs, a pinch of cinnamon, and a tablespoon of rum or cognac, ready in your blender. Add 1½ cups of scalded half-and-half, turn on the motor — and that's it! Just pour into a dish and chill.

Long, narrow eggplants tend to be more meaty, with fewer seeds, than fatter ones.

The average chicken lays only 170 eggs a year, resting every four or five days. Now scientists, using lights to fool the bird into a new schedule, have made chickens lay as many as 370 eggs a year, without a day off!

Take a day off. Enjoy dinner at The Parrot House Restaurant. You deserve a treat — and that's what you'll get, with good food and good service.

PUDDING MIX

Pudding has been a favorite for over a century

Pie and pudding starch standbys

Corn starch is one of Canada's oldest grocery products. It was in the year 1858 that W. T. Benson opened the first Canadian corn starch manufacturing plant in Cardinal, Ontario.

Over the years, many corn starch recipes have been developed but, by far, Blanc Mange and Lemon Meringue Pie have been the standards.

BLANC MANGE

½ cup sugar
5 tablespoons corn starch
¼ teaspoon salt
4 cups milk
2 teaspoons vanilla

In 2-quart saucepan stir together sugar, corn starch and salt. Gradually stir in milk until smooth. Stirring constantly, bring to boil over medium heat. Boil 1 minute. Remove from heat. Stir in vailla. Pour into serving dish or individual dishes. Lay waxed paper directly on top of pudding to prevent skin formation. chill. Makes 6 (½-cup) servings.

Chocolate Blanc Mange: Follow basic recipe. Add 3 (1-ounce) squares unsweetened chocolate, melted. Omit vanilla.

Coconut Blanc Mange: Follow basic recipe. Substitute 4 cups coconut milk for milk. To prepare coconut milk, bring 4 cups milk just to boiling point. Remove from heat, stir in 2 cups flaked coconut. Let stand 20 minutes. Strain, press coconut to remove all liquid. Add milk if needed to make 4 cups.

LEMON MERINGUE PIE

5 tablespoons corn starch
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup sugar
2 cups water
1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
2 egg yolks, slightly beaten
1 tablespoon butter
6 tablespoons lemon juice
3 egg whites
6 tablespoons sugar
9 inch baked pie shell

Combine corn starch, salt and sugar in saucepan. Gradually stir in water and add lemon rind. Cook over medium direct heat, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens and boils. Boil 1 minute. Gradually blend half of the hot mixture into egg yolks, then pour back into saucepan, blending well. Cook and stir 1 minute. Remove from heat; add butter and lemon juice. Pour hot filling into baked pie shell.

Beat egg whites until stiff; gradually beat in sugar. spread over filling making sure it touches the crust all around (this prevents meringue shrinking from edge.) Bake at 400° F 5 to 10 minutes, or until delicately rowned.

Pig ears lack protein

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A researcher has found that chitterlings are an acceptable source of protein but pig ears are not.

The nutritional value of other pork by-products — pig feet, pig knuckles, hog maws, neck bones, pig tails and lungs — are also being analyzed, but the results have not yet been published.

In an article in the Journal of Food Science, Moses William Vaughn, a food technology and science professor at the University of Maryland-Eastern Shore, said cooked chitterlings have as much protein as meat patties made up of 60 per cent beef and 40 per cent soy protein added.

Grapes with ham a great innovation

I have noted before that there are numerous prepared foods in supermarkets and grocery stores that can greatly facilitate cooking when you are mindful of the time. For a hasty lunch I am by no means above dining on a tin of sardines, a sandwich made of tuna, chopped celery, onion and green pepper and freshly made mayonnaise (which must be the quickest and most easily made sauce on earth).

One of the greatest boons to a quick meal is ham steak, which comes in a variety of sizes and styles. I find North American ham steaks quite tasty, and the only cooking that they need basically is a heating-through. There is a recipe here for ham steaks served in a cream sauce with white seedless grapes, which are to my mind one of the greatest innovations of the past generation. These grapes, called Thompson seedless, are, to my taste, sui generis where both taste and texture are concerned.

There are many so-called sophisticates in this world who cannot abide combining a savory food (such as ham) with a sweet fruit (such as grapes). They detest anything Veronique (which means with grapes) or a l'orange or peaches or apples or whatever. This has nothing to do with ultimate taste. If anyone needs an argument, you could turn to numerous dishes in the Chinese culture or the culture of the Middle East where sweet fruits and savory meats combine with the greatest harmony and have for a few thousand years.

Jambon aux raisins (raisins is, of course, the French word for fresh grapes and does not mean the dried fruit as it does in this country) is made with a hastily prepared cream sauce, Madeira wine and the grapes. If you plan to make this dish, and seedless grapes are no longer available, you could substitute drained, canned white seedless grapes. A good accompaniment to this dish would be spaetzle (the Swiss noodle dish that is now available in cartons throughout America) with a touch of cheese and mushrooms.

JAMBON AUX RAISINS
(HAM STEAKS WITH GRAPES)

1 tablespoon butter.
1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots.
2 ham steaks, 1 pound each.
2 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon Madeira wine.
2 cups fresh seedless white grapes (or use 2 cups drained canned seedless white grapes.
1 cup heavy cream.
1 teaspoon arrowroot or corn-starch.

1. Rub the bottom of a large shallow baking dish with a little of the butter.

2. Sprinkle the shallots over the dish.

3. Arrange the steaks on the skillet (they may be slightly overlapping).

4. Dot the steaks with the remaining butter and pour two tablespoons of the Madeira wine around the steaks.

5. Place the dish on the stove and cover loosely. Cook five minutes.

6. Pour the cooking liquid from the steaks into a small skillet. Keep the ham steaks covered.

7. Bring the liquid to the boil in the other skillet and add the grapes. Cook about three minutes and add the cream. Cook about five minutes over high heat.

8. Blend the arrowroot with the remaining teaspoon of Madeira wine and stir it into the sauce. When thickened, pour the grapes and sauce over the ham and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

SPAETZLE AU FROMAGE
(SWISS-STYLE DUMPLINGS WITH CHEESE)

1 package spaetzle, 10 ounces, Swiss-style dumplings, available in cartons in grocery stores and supermarkets.
3 tablespoons butter.
1 cup thinly sliced mushrooms.
2 tablespoons heavy cream.
½ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese.

1. Cook the spaetzle according to package directions.

2. As the spaetzle cooks, heat one tablespoon of the butter in a small skillet and add the mushrooms. Cook, shaking the skillet and stirring, until mushrooms give up their liquid. Cook until liquid evaporates.

3. Drain the spaetzle and add the remaining two tablespoons of butter, the mushrooms and cream. At the last minute, add the Parmesan cheese. Toss to blend.

Yield: 6 servings.

SHAPE UP FOR SPRING WITH THE HELP OF THE no nonsense DIET

In May of 1979 Natures own no nonsense diet was introduced to British Columbians and Albertans through the Prince Health Food chain. Within weeks they were sold out and by the end of July thousands of people had lost weight the no nonsense way.

Unlike most diets to have come along this one is not dying out, but gaining greater momentum all the time. The reason for this phenomenal growth lies inthe fact that those people who have tried the diet have gotten positive results. For example I know of one particular young lady who has been overweight nearly all of her life. She wanted desperately to lose 25 lbs., and tried every possible means over the last two years. She exercised, joined clubs and went to monthly meetings. All to no avail. After reading about the no nonsense diet, she decided to give it a try before throwing in the towel. It worked. Within a month she lost 23 lbs., within two more weeks she lost another 10 lbs. She is so ecstatic about this diet that she preaches it to anyone who will listen and has most of her friends on it.

The product is a dieter's dream; two tablespoons in a glass of partially skimmed milk is equal in nutrition to a complete meal. But without all those nasty little calories. It has all the essential amino acids, and Vitamins and Minerals in a delicious powder base. The no nonsense formula comes in two flavours, luscious chocolate and tasty vanilla.

Here is a list of the Vitamins and Minerals it contains:

Vitamin A
Thiamin
Choline
Iodine
Potassium

Vitamin E
Riboflavin
Calcium Magnesium
Manganese

Vitamin C
Niacin B6, B12
Phosphorous
Copper
Sodium

Vitamin D
Folid Acid Blotin
Iron
Zinc
d-Panothenic Acid

This is a wonderful diet because you are dealing with natural foods and not drugs, consequently it is safe and very healthy. A lot of people after going on this diet, have noticed remarkable improvement in their hair, skin and nails.

The no nonsense diet is Distributed by Superior Natural Formulas Ltd. and is available at Leading Retailers throughout Greater Victoria.

Soup named for Billy B.

Readers are invited to send in questions about food and cooking techniques to the Food Editor, The New York Times, 229 West 43rd Street, New York, N.Y. 10036. Unfortunately unpublished questions cannot be answered individually.

RICE PUDDING, homemade or tinned, tastes terrific toped with tinned peaches packed in their own juice. Chill amply in fridge or freezer before serving.

Q. As you know, billi-bi is a cream of mussel soup. I think it is the best soup I've ever eaten in my entire life. Do you know the origin of the name? It certinly is a strange one!

A. Legend has it that a very wealthy North American tin tycoon invariably and often dined at Maxim's Restaurant when he visited Paris.

Just as invariably he began his meals with cream of mussel soup. The gentleman's name was William B. Leeds, who was known to his friends as Billy. Thus Billy B got tacked onto the name of cream of mussel soup.

Q. In reading recipes, I often come across those that call for a "meat glaze." I am not familiar with this. Can you tell me what it is?

A. A meat glaze is known in French as a "glace de viande." It is made by a long and tedious process that involves browning beef, veal or other bones with vegetables, transferring these ingredients to a kettle and adding water or stock. This mixture is simmered for hours. The liquid is cooked down until, when it is chilled, it will be like a very hard, dark jelly. A meat glaze is used in very small quantities to give body or flavor to a food, to "garnish" certain dishes and so on.

Q. I am an ardent cook and have what I would call a semi-professional kitchen. How do you recommend that a wooden butcher block or cutting board be sanitized?

A. First, let me state my position on butcher blocks and cutting boards. I do have a professional-style butcher block in my kitchen that is one-foot deep. For cutting I have two white, dense, rectangular, plastic boards which, unlike wood, do not splinter. They measure about 16 by 20 inches overall. I prefer these to wood, because they are not as apt to harbor bacteria. They are non-porous and do not dull knives any more than a wooden board would.

To my mind it is important that both the chopping block and the cutting boards be washed and-or scrubbed after each and every use. As to the cutting boards, I remove them from the work surface and wash them well with a sponge, detergent and hot water. On the chopping block I generally use a scrub brush with a scouring powder to begin with, followed by further cleansing with a sponge, detergent and hot water. I end by rubbing with a clean sponge and more hot water.

The Lord is my Shepherd

I shall not want

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures

He restoreth my soul

He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake

Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death

I will fear no evil

For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me

before me in the
enemies

Thou anointest my head with oil

My cup runneth over

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Start watching now for aphids

A mild day or two will bring aphids into sight even before February is far gone. We don't find them yet in the open garden but wherever there is shelter and the consequent new tip growth, they may well develop.

Balcony gardens with sheltered warm sunny corners are likely to be targets, or rather the plants in them.

It is the early starters having succulent tips that serve as a source of nutrients for green aphids. The suck the juices from the stems usually because that is where most nutrients are located until leaves are fully expanded. If the leaves survive to reach the expansion stage, clusters of green aphids will be found on the undersides of the leaves while they are still young and fresh.

Another place to look for these insects is on seedlings or plant cuttings being grown in glassed-in porch windows or in heated room windows.

Experienced amateurs tend to water young plants less frequently than beginners in order to give the plants a chance to ripen or harden at a natural rate.

Similarly, experienced gardeners are reluctant to give fertilizer stimulant to plants in closed quarters. Time enough when they are in more open situations — either in the garden or other generally well ventilated spot.

At the first sign of these green aphids, there will be few enough that wiping them off with the fingers is possible. The squeamish can use soft tissue, but pressure on stems must be avoided.

Even though a search using a hand magnifying glass reveals no other aphids, there must be further examinations on each of the three next days to remove newly hatched aphids from unseen eggs laid before the original batch of insects was wiped out.

A week later, make another search; the last batch of eggs laid will by that time be hatched, and the trouble should be over for the time being.

People wonder how these and other small insects get into house plants or on highrise balcony plants. There are many ways. Tiny insects are carried by vagrant breezes for great distances at surprising heights in suitable weather — mild, for instance.

They may alight on one's clothing while walking on the street, on the hair, or on a furry pet that is taken into the home. To survive they must quickly find a suitable host plant, with tender new growth to nourish them and their numerous progeny.

Whether the plant lover controls these insects by hand, by soft soap solution in a spray followed by a clear water spray, or by using commercial chemical insecticides, frequent close examination of all plants must be made to prevent continuing infestation.

This is particularly necessary now with house and balcony plants. A little later, as new growth begins on roses, honeysuckles and all the many shrubs which make fast young growth, frequent inspection will repay the outdoor gardener, for the beginnings can be noted and dealt with.

Prevention of widespread damage is possible; it takes close observation.

Bani-Sadr okays UN panel but departure is delayed

Times News Services

The United Nations commission formed to investigate the deposed shah of Iran has delayed its departure for Tehran until the weekend because the Iranians want more time to prepare for the mission, UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim announced today.

Waldheim also said the Iranians, injecting a new element into the negotiations, want the five commission members to speak to all of the approximately 50 American hostages being held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

Tehran radio announced today that Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr had sent a cable to Waldheim giving approval to the mission and noting that Ayatollah Khomeini had also given his approval.

One of the commission members, who are standing by in Geneva, Switzerland, said earlier today there was a "gentlemen's agreement" that the hostages would be released as a result of their mission. But he denied reports that a deadline for their freedom had been set.

Waldheim, speaking to reporters in New York, did not mention the release of the hostages as an objective of the inquiry.

It was still unclear exactly when and how the about 50 Americans will be released from the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, where they began their 109th day in captivity today.

Bani-Sadr's appointment as supreme military commander stirred speculation he might send soldiers to the embassy to replace the Islamic militants holding the hostages.

Waldheim also was quoted by Vienna's Die Presse newspaper as saying the investigation will take one to two weeks and the hostages will be freed in the course of the commission's work.

But that was disputed by Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, who told reporters on his return Tuesday to Tehran following a European tour the hostages will not be freed until the commission's work is complete.

"The release of the hostages at this point is neither foreseen nor has it been discussed," Ghotbzadeh said.

The commission will investigate Iranian charges that Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, the deposed shah, engaged in mass murder of political opponents and plundered Iran's treasury during his 37-year reign.

It will also examine Iranian complaints that the United States interfered in the country's affairs by supporting the shah, who was restored to power in 1953 with the help of the Central Intelligence Agency.

President Carter has refused to meet Iran's demand that the U.S. government admit guilt for supporting the shah's regime.

In Panama City, a prominent Panamanian lawyer representing Iran in extradition proceedings against the deposed shah of Iran said Tuesday the monarch-in-exile could be arrested once papers are served.

News service closed

NEW YORK (AP) — The North American News Alliance, the news service that paid for Thor Heyerdahl's Pacific Ocean crossing by raft and distributed Ernest Hemingway's dispatches on the Spanish Civil War, will discontinue operation on Feb. 29.

United Feature Syndicate, the parent organization which made the announcement Tuesday, also said the alliance's affiliate Women's News Service will end operations the same day.

Sidney Goldberg, executive editor of both services, said the decision was based "on the changing needs of the newspaper market."

Established in 1922 as a co-operative, the North American news Alliance included among its charter members the Chicago Daily News, Atlanta Constitution, Boston Globe, Buffalo News, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Detroit News, Kansas City Star, Washington Star, Philadelphia Bulletin, Milwaukee Journal, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and the old New York World.

The New York Times, joining after the World folded, was a member until 1963, the service said.

The service at various times took dispatches from Leon Trotsky, Harry Truman, Benito Mussolini, Erich Marie Remarque, and other world figures, said a statement.

Award-winning alliance writers included Ira Wolfort, who won the 1943 Pulitzer Prize for his coverage of a race for control of the St. Piérre-Miquelon islands off Newfoundland, and Vincent Sheean, who in 1925 interviewed the elusive Abd El Krim, the semi-legendary Rif rebel of Morocco.

The service underwent several changes of ownership and in 1972 was bought by United Feature Syndicate along with the Women's News Service and other features of the larger Bell-McClure Syndicate.

The Women's News Service was started in 1946 and pioneered discussion of topics such as abortion.

Puzzle solution details arrive

Here is the detailed solution to the Prevue Payoff Puzzle of February 9. Only the grid arrived in time for inclusion in last Friday's paper.

1. SPOUTING not shouting. The clue suggests a case of a man who is seeking attention (though not of the "kind he doesn't really want"), as when SPOUTING political opinions, etc. Simply "shouting" (what, why?) is comparatively vague.
6. WEDDING not weeding. On a WEDDING day, the planned timetable should obviously allow a suitable time for that particular part of the proceedings. Weeding is an indefinite sort of job.
7. MEANS not beans. The immediate and natural point about a "hungry looking hobo" is that he shows no evidence of possessing MEANS ("beans" being unsuitably specific).
8. TRY not pry. When you pry (e.g., on a single occasion in search of a specific fact) there may not be an amount of information in question; which the clue assumes there is (that you may, or "may not," learn as much of it as you wanted). This objection hardly applies in the case of TRY.
10. RIB not rob. As suggested, youths may not mean to hurt too badly an old man they RIB. If they are ready to rob an old man, they don't care how much he is hurt.
16. TOOL not wool. The wool obtained for one job is hardly likely to be available — all of it — for another; it's more a question of the remnant coming in handy later.
19. LINE not lane. Being "nose to tail" is a question of being in LINE, whether or not in a traffic lane or other lane as such.
20. GRIM not prim. As suggested, the remonstrating teacher may be trying to appear GRIM or stern (but hardly "prim").
23. CONCEALED not congealed. It is more especially when CONCEALED that it will no longer be "seen."
25. DELAY not decay. The DELAY (which is implicit in the fact that he cannot sell as promptly as he would wish) may indeed lead to monetary disadvantage, but there need't be any actual decay ("the" decay which the clue would assume).

CLUES DOWN

1. SHEARS not spears. Spears are mounted on a wall for ornament or effect, or as exhibits, rather than merely for convenience, as garden SHEARS are often so placed.
3. GREEK not green. A plain green uniform would not be what is termed "colorful," as a GREEK one (as of the Evzones, say) might well be.
4. PLANE not plank. As the clue implies, a carpenter doesn't like to drop a PLANE (though he "won't usually get too upset" if he happens to do so). He probably couldn't care less about a plank.
9. YAWNING not yarning. The clue suits a basic oral process such as YAWNING or speaking ("yarning" being pointlessly specific).
11. BOOT not book. It is a mislaid BOOT, rather, that links up with the idea of untidiness, since it is not uncommon for other people to be to blame in the case of a book (borrowed, etc.)
13. EAR not car. He would certainly resent being struck on the EAR, but he might be unaware of his car having been struck.
15. BLOCKS not clocks. The clue refers to a "tough" question, such as the number of BLOCKS in the town's street-plan, rather than a wildly unrealistic question such as the number of clocks (the answer to which would be imponderable anyway), which would hardly be possible to ask.

U.K. sets first union clamp

LONDON (AP) — Britain's Conservative government, plagued by strikes, high inflation and rising unemployment, made its first firm move Tuesday to curb trade union power by restricting secondary picketing.

Attorney-General Sir Michael Havers, in a speech to the House of Commons as a countrywide steel strike headed for its eighth week, gave pickets staging blockades a thinly-veiled warning they could go to jail.

He said British law is intended to protect the rights of all, including the right to work. "If we let go of that principle . . . we risk surrender to the rule of violence."

Employment Secretary James Prior announced proposed new laws allowing companies not directly involved in a strike to sue "flying pickets" who blockade their factories.

The loosely-worded curbs, which officials plan to make law by the summer, fell far short of the Conservatives' promise to outlaw secondary picketing — one of the election pledges that brought Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to power last May.

The move reflected a compromise between Mrs. Thatcher, who was reported to want to crack down on the country's 12 million-member trade union movement, and Prior as well as other moderates afraid of provoking the first general strike in a half century. The Confederation of British Industry and many industrial leaders back Prior's policy.

Steel union strike co-ordinator Sandy Feather said the new law would mean "hefty fines and prison sentences but won't stop secondary picketing."

Secondary picketing is the picketing of other companies in the same or related business but which are not actually being struck themselves.

Under Prior's proposals, secondary picketing will have to be "reasonably capable" of furthering the striking union's cause, and be confined to a struck firm's immediate suppliers and customers.

As the government made its announcement, strikers from the state-run British Steel Corp. again picketed the handful of privately owned steel mills that still operate despite union demands that workers walk out in support.

The steelmen, who earn an average of £92.97 ($256.46) weekly, seek a 20-per-cent pay raise. The company has offered 14 per cent.

'Pain-sharing' no basis for damage suit

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal judge has refused to award damages to a woman who complained that because of "extrasensory empathy" she suffered agonizing pain while her twin sister was being killed in the world's worst aviation disaster.

In dismissing the suit, U.S. District Judge Robert Ward said Tuesday that he found no grounds for damages to Martha Burke who was at home in Fremont, Calif., when two 747 jetliners collided while taking off in the Canary Islands on March 27, 1977.

The Burke woman's twin sister, Margaret Fox, was one of 580 victims of the airport runway collision between Pan American and KLM jetliners on Santa Cruz de Tenerife island.

The plaintiff claimed that shortly after she suddenly woke up in her California home, she began to "feel nervous and upset."

"She then purports to have felt, at the precise time of the Tenerife crash, a painful burning sensation inside her chest and abdomen, and sensations of being 'split' and of emptiness 'like a black hole' within her body," wrote Ward in a five-page opinion.

In ruling on the case, Ward did not dispute the Burke woman's contention that "pain-sharing" was a documented phenomenon. But he concluded that her argument ignores the specific liability guidelines established under law.

General strike threat as firemen talks falter

CHICAGO (AP) — Talks between city labor leaders and Mayor Jane Byrne broke off early today with no reported progress toward ending a firefighters strike — a walkout that threatened to erupt into a general shutdown of city services.

The mayor reiterated the city's position that negotiations can resume only when the firefighters return to work.

"We gave those firefighters every possible way out," she said early today.

The mayor said that the Chicago Fire Fighters Union rejected for a second time a city proposal for a 90-day cooling-off period in which firefighters would return to work while a fact-finding team explored the issues involved.

There was no immediate comment from labor leaders on the latest breakdown in talks.

Labor officials, including President William Lee of the Chicago Federation of Labor, are reported to have attempted to persuade Mrs. Byrne to resume bargaining with the union, despite her vow not to do so until its members returned to work.

Earlier Tuesday, Circuit Judge John Hechinger ordered city and union officials back to the table.

Mrs. Byrne's press secretary and husband, Jay McMullen, told reporters the mayor has ordered city negotiators "not to engage in any negotiations or make any concession or anything."

Meanwhile, The Tribune quotes an unidentified adviser to Lee as saying the situation is "dynamite."

The federation's executive board, in a resolution Monday supporting the strike, said its members will not cross firefighters' picket lines — in effect threatening a general strike by city employees as the city continued hiring recruits as permanent replacements for some of the strikers.

LSD-fed soldier to get $1M?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An ex-Army private given LSD without his knowledge as part of a military drug experiment would get $1 million in damages under a bill approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The committee approved the bill Tuesday by voice vote and sent it to the Senate floor for debate. It authorizes a $1 million payment to James Thornwell as compensation for "severe physical, psychological and economic damage" he suffered as a result of the 1961 Army drug testing program.

Thornwell, formerly of Spatanburg County, S.C., and now of San Francisco, was stationed in Orleans, France, when he was administered the LSD in his drinking water. He registered a violent reaction to the drug at the time, but did not learn he had been the subject of an LSD experiment until 1978 when he received a routine medical follow-up notice from the Army.

He subsequently sued the government for $10 million.

TV coverage flattens pancake race results

OLNEY, England (AP) — Two housewives were declared joint winners of the annual Olney Pancake Race in this Buckinghamshire County village west of London today after they ran into the back of a television camera truck filming them.

Rosemary Ludgate, 22, and Sylvia Smith, 28, both crossed the finish line of the 415-metre, S-shaped course at the same time after going round the TV van. The apron-clad women had to flip a pancake at least twice while running the race.

The event, which attracts thousands of spectators every year, is part of an annual contest between women of Olney and Liberal, Kan.

The organizers gave no time for the winners' dash through the village, flipping pancakes in skillets, because the TV truck slowed them down.

Last year's winner clocked 63 seconds. Olney's best time was 59.8 seconds in 1975 and Liberal's 58.5 seconds the same year.

In the contest with the women of Liberal — to see who can cover the distance in the best time — the women of the Kansas town hold an 18-12 edge over Olney's contestants.

Legend has it that Olney's contest has been run every Shrove Tuesday — the day before the first day of Lent on which shrift or confession was made before the traditional Christian fast — since 1445.

It went international in 1950 when Liberal challenged Olney to an annual bout of trans-Atlantic pancake-panning.

Priest killed in Rhodesia

SALISBURY (AP) — Attackers shot and bayonetted to death a Swiss priest, the second missionary to be slain in Rhodesia since the ceasefire went into effect Jan. 4.

Authorities said Rev. Kilian Huesser, 38, a member of the Swiss Mission Society of Bethlehem, was killed Tuesday by 15 armed men who attacked his mission 65 kilometres south of Fort Victoria and led away several hostages.

Another priest was killed in the area two weeks ago, allegedly by guerrillas loyal to black leader Robert Mugabe, whose party is expected to take most of the 80 seats reserved for blacks in parliamentary elections next week.

The other seats are expected to go to followers of Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa and Joshua Nkomo, Mugabe's co-leader in the guerrilla alliance that fought Ian Smith's white-minority government for seven years.

Smith's party took the 20 parliamentary seats reserved for whites in voting last week.

Britain's interim governor in Rhodesia, Lord Soames, so far has been unsuccessful in his attempts to end political violence as the former colony heads toward black-majority rule and independence from the crown.

Elsewhere in Rhodesia, African villagers and politicians at Mount Darwin complained bitterly Tuesday of activities by Rhodesia's controversial black auxiliary forces, accusing them of barring free and fair elections.

The brown-uniformed force, numbering up to 30,000, is technically integrated into government forces but it is viewed largely as loyal to Abel Muzorewa's United African National Council — Mugabe's main rival at the polls.

Political representatives said auxiliaries have prevented other parties from entering the barbed wire-surrounded protective villages in which most of the 26,500 voters in this area live.

A National Council candidate, Emmie Ncube, denied the charge, saying she had to cancel several meetings because of intimidation by Mugabe's group and political violence by Zimbabwe African National Liberation Army, the military wing of Mugabe's group.

UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, meanwhile, has decided it would be inappropriate for him to visit Rhodesia now that an election campaign is under way but he may send a representative, a British spokesman said Tuesday night.

Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere has accused Britain of violating the London agreement on Rhodesian independence and cabled Waldheim last week urging him to undertake a personal, fact-finding mission.

Salvador leftists march for change

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Thousands of leftist protesters marched through the Salvadorean capital, keeping up their pressure for the ouster of a junta that took power four months ago.

About 5,000 members of the Popular Revolutionary Bloc, the country's largest leftist group, organized the demonstration Tuesday, the seventh march protesting government policy in as many days. The group has led a leftist alliance to press for social reforms and, eventually, establishment of a Marxist government.

Many shopkeepers closed their stores in anticipation of violence, but none was reported.

Shortly after the demonstrators reached a farm loan bank the bloc had occupied for two weeks, the bank was vacated and the last 75 of 450 hostages were freed.

Group spokesmen said the government met all its demands. The group had called for better loan rates for farmers and the release of political prisoners. The government had no comment.

Salvador's civilian-military junta, the second of its type since the military staged a coup last October ousting President Carlos Humberto Romero, appeared content to let the group march without interference.

The bloc continues to occupy an education ministry office seized Monday and the capital's foreign industrial development offices, occupied since last Friday. In all, more than 100 hostages are being held.

Negotiations are reported to be continuing between the government and the bloc, which is demanding jobs for workers laid off when foreign firms suspended business activities because of political problems in the country.

In Mexico City, meanwhile, the occupation of the Belgian and Danish Embassies went into a third day today with leftist militants vowing to remain until their demands are met.

Sources close to the situation said negotiations are continuing between government officials and the occupiers, members of the National Democratic Popular Front who seized both embassies Monday morning.

Wash. member charged, quits

OLYMPIA, Wash. (UPI) — A state legislator charged with lewd conduct along with the president of the nation's seventh largest brewery and a state official has resigned his House seat Monday and insisted he was innocent.

Rep. Eric Rohrbach, a Seattle Republican, showed up at his desk on the House floor for the first time since his arrest Monday.

"The charges made against me last week which have been expanded upon by the media have caused me untold personal embarrassment and irreparable damage," he said. "I stand before you innocent of these charges. I am not a homosexual.

"Unfortunately, I probably stand convicted already in many people's minds."

Rohrbach, 28, was executive chairman of the House Insurance Committee.

He was arrested along with Leopold F. Schmidt and Joseph Dean Gregorius during a police investigation of homosexual activity in a public restroom at a lakefront park a dozen blocks from the capitol.

Schmidt, 39, resigned his $132,000-a-year job as president of the Olympia Brewing Co. over the weekend.

A brewery spokesman said Schmidt resigned his job for medical reasons and has placed himself under the care of a doctor. He was succeeded by his uncle, Robert Schmidt, 64, who retired as president in 1977 and has been serving as chairman of the Board of Directors.

Gregorious, 40, was reported ready to resign his job as director of the office of alcohol and substance abuse for the state Department of Social and Health Service when state offices open for business Tuesday.

Police Chief John Warner said last week the three men were surprised by a detective in the restroom, which had been under surveillance for a three-week period because of citizen complaints that something "funny" was going on.

Child-selling law passed in Wash.

OLYMPIA (AP) — Child selling will be a felony in Washington under a bill that has received House and Senate approval.

However, the Senate still must approve an amendment that would permit adopted persons, after reaching age 21, to seek out their natural parents.

The House added the amendment Tuesday to the Senate-passed child selling bill before approving the whole package on a 91-5 vote.

Under provisions of the amendment, adopted persons 21 years of age or older could petition the courts to reveal the names of their natural parents.

However, the natural parents would have to consent to identification before the court could issue an order.

The child-selling bill was prompted when juvenile authorities in Hoquiam reported they had taken temporary custody of a 5-year-old boy whose mother attempted to sell him for $5,500.

The authorities said they could find no laws prohibiting child selling in Washington State.

The woman eventually was charged with illegally trying to relinquish custody of a child, a misdemeanor.

Mother teaches child shoplifting

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — City police say they caught a mother teaching her 2-year-old son a trade — shoplifting.

Police say a department store security guard saw the tyke strolling through the budget department, helping himself to a matching set of children's underwear priced at $4.99. The toddler stuffed it into a shopping bag before meeting his mother.

In the handbag department, with his mother at his side, the youngster reached under a counter and filched a shopping bag.

The security guard told police the mother repacked the stolen goods and let the child carry them out to the street.

A report of the arrest was forewarded to the Washington state Department of Social and Health Services, where a decision will be made on what to do with the child.

The Matchmakers: jobs for the young

By PAT DUFOUR

Jim was a dropout. Jobs were hard to find.

His skills were few but tinkering with cars was his hobby.

Last year he found a job through the Provincial Youth Employment Program.

Field co-ordinator Brian Gardiner said his organization "matched up" Jim — not his real name — with an employer who makes racing cars from scratch.

Today he's permanently employed, making racing cars and racing them on the side. His employer is now thinking about getting into the business of specialized vehicles, such as bullet-proof limousines.

Thanks to a hobby, and the job program, Jim's on his way.

Jane was different. She had skills, having graduated from Ottawa's Carleton University journalism program. But she couldn't find a job.

Through the same program she was placed with a community newspaper, and then was hired full-time.

In 1979 a total of $1,674,677 was allocated to the program in this area and 1,522 jobs were created for people between 15 and 24.

Gardiner and fellow field co-ordinator Pam Cambell are now busy lining up jobs for the coming season and have already received about 50 applications from employers wanting to participate.

The program provides wage subsidies to employers who hire a youth or student. Farms and businesses who have been in existence for one year and can provide a minimum of two months full-time employment can apply for reimbursement up to $2.50 an hour per employee.

This will be the first year that applications can be received year round.

Non-profit organizations can receive up to $3.40 per hour per employee. Deadline for applications is March 3.

Project expenses, such as money to buy a typewriter, also are available.

Before coming here, Gardiner was a field co-ordinator in the Nanaimo area. He tells how a small monastery near Duncan was helped by the program.

In order to support themselves the monks do drywalling. They wanted to teach the trade to a youth who had been in a bit of trouble. Such a youth was found and the job was set.

Most contracts are for two to four months but extensions to eight months are made when the employer can almost guarantee the on-the-job training will lead to permanent employment. Gardiner says there were 110 extensions in 1979 and 90 per cent led to permanent jobs.

Gardiner and Campbell say the decision to allow applications for the farm and business programs to continue year-round means funds will be better utilized. In the past, allocated funds have been wasted when companies went out of business or started programs later than planned. Now, such funds can be fed back into the system.

In the Youth Employment office at 808 Douglas there is a computer system which is used for a referral service. But this is mainly used for finding jobs with the provincial government.

Campbell says the young people are taught how to make out resumes, advised on local job opportunities and counselled on the jobs they seek.

This year's allocation of funds has not been set but Gardiner estimates it will be about the same as last year when more than 1,500 jobs were found.

Meanwhile, he and Campbell are visiting potential employers and talking to such groups as Chambers of Commerce and the United Way in preparation for the task ahead.

Employers who are interested in taking part in the program can learn more about it by phoning the office at 387-1131.

TOWN TALK

The Forty Thieves disco at the Century Inn was booked as the Rhino party headquarters on election night but it was fairly sedate, attracting mostly young disco dancers.

Tusked candidate Bob Maddocks, who got a surprising 551 votes in Esquimalt-Saanich, was there for a while, still snapping off one-liners.

He budgeted one and a half cents per voter for his campaign, he said, because he didn't think they were worth the proverbial two cents.

He expressed his thanks to the voters with an ad in the classifieds Tuesday: "To those who voted for me more than once, double thanks."

But seriously, folks, the bartender seemed to sum up the election in a couple of lines:

"You've got nobody to bitch to now when gas goes up. Tough, you got a majority."

Maddocks' manager Al Coccola is slightly peeved at the press for ignoring the credible showing the party made nation-wide.

Rhinos racked up 108,000 votes, several thousand more than the failing Social Credit party but no one in the media took note.

They beat 30 Socreds, mostly in Quebec, and several New Democrats and Tories. One last-minute Socred in Alberta got only eight votes, Coccola says, well behind the Rhino.

But the television election computers just lumped the Rhinos in with "other."

"It really bugs me," he says.

And another Rhino weighs in with his post-election analysis.

Louis (Crowbird) Lesosky says regardless of the outcome he's happy to represent all the people of "Malahat-Cow-and the Islands."

He's going to fulfil some of his promises straight away.

"The Rhino government is not going to collect any taxes this year, nor will we be giving any income tax returns."

But he said he'll have to break the promise to issue credit cards to old age pensioners.

"Our printers are too busy printing three dollar bills."

Crowbird also promises to create unemployment at the dumps by establishing drop-off points for all reuseable garbage all over the riding. Anyone want a "rhino dump" in their back yard?

Don't call us, see Crowbird. Box 765 in Ganges, 653-4647.

Former Liberal MP for Esquimalt-Saanich, David Anderson was the French connection in federal election coverage.

Anderson is now a lecturer in the University of Victoria school of public administration, but served time prior to his political career in the external affairs department and speaks a pretty fair game of French.

With that kind of background the Montreal-based CBC French network tabbed him to be their Western Canadian pundit during Monday night election commentary, flying him to Ottawa last Friday afternoon.

As our source commented: "His French is better than John Chretien's English."

Pierre Trudeau's back as PM and Victoria impersonator-mimic Steve Ivings might make a buck or two out of Pierre's rebirth.

Ivings had two satirical records — one commenting on a Trudeau election win, the other on Joe Clark in the event he should get back in — ready for release.

So now you'll hear Irvings, in a Trudeauish sounding voice, uttering lines like: "Ha, Ha, I won, I get another crack, I may have lost my hair, but I got my country back."

Ivings' effort will be released generally in a couple of weeks.

New Democrat Bob Cameron, who did well in Esquimalt-Saanich, was a little worse for wear on election night. The whole family had the flu at one point both family cars conked out during the campaign.

"But politically it went well," he told party workers.

It may have contributed to the sharp drop in votes for Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro.

The weekend open house at the Trident Aircraft hangar attracted 3,500 people in just five hours on Saturday.

Derrick Young, the company's manager of production control, said the building was jammed all afternoon and Trident ran out of coffee and doughnuts several times.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Dagger of Sidney won the door prize, a flight around Victoria and the Gulf Islands, unfortunately not in one of the company's Trigulls — federal regulations prohibit it.

Young Pamela Coward won an autographed picture of Trigull, signed by test pilot Jerry Westfall who took the amphibian up to a new unofficial record altitude last fall.

You can do what you want, of course, the B.C. liquor branch's general manager Vic Woodland has told the province's restaurant operators, but starting immediately you should feature B.C. wines as your house wine.

Hotel operators say the directive is no problem because it is already common practice to boost the local product.

And they know what "should" means, too.

The provincial government's Central Microfilm Service has hit an unexpected bonanza.

It is recovering spent silver from film processing operations and expects to bring in about $28,000 this year as a result.

In previous years, the silver bromide in the film emulsion was discarded. An electrolysis silver recovery unit was installed this year for environmental reasons.

The silver price boom brought the unexpected dividend. In the last two months, the service has recovered two pounds, six ounces of silver, more than enough to pay for the recovery unit.

The price of silver is now about $40 Canadian per troy ounce.

Who said there's no money in recycling?

A more mundane item than a billboard might be hard to find but even they can fetch many times their original value.

The large wooden board at Tillicum and Burnside — for more than 20 years a front gate landmark of the drive-in theatre — was removed by crane and flatbed truck this week.

Attica Historic Home Supplies engineered the deal for the 40-foot showboard and its collection of king-size letters.

The next time you see it will be at Painter's Lodge in Campbell River, at a cost to the lodge of around $1,000.

Back in the 50s there might have been $200 worth of materials in it.

Racquet club sold to Vancouver firm

The Racquet Club of Victoria has been sold to a Vancouver firm but will remain as a private recreation facility.

Shareholders Tuesday night voted 80 per cent to approve its sale to brothers Mark and Terry Grimwood of Grimwood & Co. The firm has a Victoria office.

Mark Grimwood said here today the takeover probably will be in March.

Under terms of the sale, the members have a buy-back option if the club isn't successful.

A $600,000 renovation and expansion project will begin immediately, Grimwood said.

Membership fees will stay the same for two years and present members have a 30-day option to join the new club without payment of a $200 initiation fee which takes effect after that time.

The Grimwoods own two private squash-racquetball clubs in Greater Vancouver.

Improvements to the Victoria club will include a new entrance, expanded lounge facility and addition of four or five racquetball courts and the same number of international squash courts.

All the improvements should be completed by the fall, Grimwood said.

Racquet Club of Victoria Holdings Ltd. president Don Francis said shareholders picked the Grimwood proposal because the brothers have an excellent record in the recreation business and a proven management ability.

"They're willing to gamble to turn the club into a viable enterprise," he said.

The Grimwoods will pay $5,000 for the assets of the 7.5-acre facility at 3964 Gordon Head Road and assume all debts, estimated at $900,000.

About 600 of the 1,500 club shareholders voted during the special meeting Tuesday.

The Grimwood offer was one of three proposals submitted.

Thirty club members made an unsuccessful bid to purchase the facility in an offer similar to the Grimwoods but with a much smaller renovation program.

The third offer under consideration was from Saanich, which proposed to assume the debts and turn it into a public recreation centre.

Commitment in writing asked on Trident funds

The Trident issue was in a holding pattern today with the B.C. Development Corp. waiting for written confirmation from the new Liberal government that federal funding will be restored.

BCDC president Newell Morrison wants to get the commitment in writing before the BCDC fulfils its promise to provide interim financing for the Sidney company.

He has a telegram from Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau pledging the original $4 million in loan guarantees — if the Grits won the election — "but you can't take it to the bank and I'm a banker."

Morrison said in an interview he anticipated no difficulty in getting the money to Trident. It's just a matter of someone in the civil service taking the initiative and telling the provincial Crown corporation to go ahead and provide interim money.

"We have to be absolutely sure we're going to be reimbursed," Morrison said.

Defeated Liberal candidate Gerry Kristianson, who obtained Trudeau's word on Trident last week, wondered what more BCDC could want.

"I'm a bit surprised," he said. "If you can't trust the written word of the prime minister in a telegram, the original of which BCDC has . . ."

The candidate repeated the key paragraph of Trudeau's wire to him last Thursday:

"If we are successful Feb. 18 we shall fulfil our previous commitment and, beyond that, we will work with all parties concerned to ensure that Trident is a success."

Kristianson pointed out on election night that the promise did not hinge upon his winning in Esquimalt-Saanich. He came third, behind the NDP's Bob Cameron and veteran MP Donald Munro.

'If he wants to do it all . . .'

Ald. Sandy Noel of Saanich said today Mayor Mel Couvelier's decision to single-handedly change the structure of the municipal council smacks of autocracy.

"He'll lose the co-operation of council if he comes out as a dictator," said Noel, who gave Couvelier a Nazi salute during a Tuesday night council meeting.

The mayor told council he has the power to change the system and will restructure council any way he wants.

A 45-minute debate on streamlining the system ended with Couvelier announcing he will install a new council system for a trial two months.

Couvelier believes the system will become more efficient by eliminating committees and setting up one standing committee with himself as chairman.

Committee business would be done after weekly council meetings.

"If he wants to do that he doesn't need a council really," Noel said today.

"If he wants to do it all that's fine — I'll go play golf."

Although he is opposed to the management-type system, Noel said he isn't worried because Couvelier has always been fair and competent.

Other aldermen don't agree with Couvelier's plan to eliminate the committee system.

"Public input will be sacrificed on the altar of efficiency," Ald. Irene Block said during the Monday meeting.

But Couvelier said it is too late for council to go back to the old system.

"I find it ridiculous and unbelievable at this stage of the game to say you want to change your minds and go back the way we were," Couvelier said.

Duscussions on ways to improve the system began more than six months ago when Couvelier suggested abolishing committees because they are time consuming.

A lot of committee business can be handled by municipal staff, he suggested.

Council recently agreed to to give municipal clerk Bob Sharp more authority and to add extra staff to handle increased workload any proposed streamlining would create.

"We've changed our philosophy of management, we can't go back now," Couvelier said.

Council needs one standing committee to deal with any subject, said Couvelier, adding that as mayor he has power to make changes without asking for council approval.

Ald. Ed Lum told council it is the mayor's prerogative to give change a chance.

Block said her suggestion to keep committee chairmen isn't an attempt to erode the mayor's authority.

She said retaining separate committees would be less confusing for the public who otherwise would have to sit through an entire meeting waiting for their item to come up.

It would give people a chance to have direct contact with aldermen at the committee level, she said.

Couvelier said he will have more discussions with staff before developing the new council structure.

$50 million rain bill?

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta should spend $50 million to increase rainfall in southern Alberta, provincial Liberal Leader Nick Taylor said.

Taylor told a news conference the money should come from the $5.5-billion Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund and go into a cloud seeding program.

Each additional 2.5 centimetres of rain could increase wheat production by four to eight bushels an acre, Taylor said, citing statistics from University of Oklahoma.

A project in western Oklahoma was expected to increase farm income by $84 million a year by adding 12.5 centimetres of rain to the 62.5 centimetres normally expected in the area each year. Taylor said the benefit could be even higher now because the figure was calculated four years ago.

He said extra snow could be piled up in the mountains each winter to help the ski business and provide more water for summer off-stream storage.

The provincial government has run a weather modification and hail suppression experiment near Red Deer for several years. Taylor said the true worth of cloud seeding should be determined in tests over an area of as much as 840 square kilometres over three years.

He said a government study's talk about possible legal problems should neighboring provinces or states complain about loss of precipitation was merely a legalistic concern developed by Premier Peter Lougheed as an excuse to do nothing.

Neighborhood watch rides the range

CALGARY (CP) — A province-wide system of range patrols is being set up to try to reduce rural crime in Alberta.

Stan Wilson, chairman of the Alberta cattle commission, said at a news conference that experimental range patrols at Nanton, Didsbury, Provost and Cochrane have helped significantly reduce rural crime in those areas.

The commission and Western Stock Growers Association, working with the RCMP, announced they are organizing a province-wide system of range patrols as part of a rural crime watch.

The livestock organizations are interested because cattle rustling comprises a large part of rural crime in the province.

"Range patrols are extra eyes and ears to the RCMP," Insp. Len Jerritt of the RCMP told the news conference. He will oversee operations from Calgary east to the Saskatchewan border.

"The program itself is preventive. Rural crime watch is neighborhood crime watch taken out into the country."

The program has a number of aspects, but includes a high-profile range patrol which has volunteer farmers patrolling on horseback, in trucks and even in private aircraft to watch for unusual goings-on.

Wheat price talk to go on

REGINA (CP) — Canadian and American agricultural officials have agreed to continue talks aimed at raising wheat prices, Gordon Barber, a spokesman for the Palliser Wheat Growers Association, said.

In a prepared statement, Barber said a meeting was held Feb. 12 in Washington between the Minnesota Association of Wheat Growers, the National Association of Wheat Growers and Palliser. American and Canadian government officials were also involved, he said.

The release quotes Jack Felgenhauer, president of the National Association of Wheat Growers, as saying with farm costs rising, producers "cannot continue to operate any longer at yesterday's wheat price."

The release said because of differences in marketing systems in Canada and the U.S. the officials were unable to agree on how to get a higher price for producers. "The U.S. people felt Canada should be ready to implement a production controol program in times of overabundance."

Barber predicted severe food shortages if farmers don't get real income and relief from having to live off inflated land values.

19 Indian constables graduate

REGINA (CP) — Nineteen Indian constables were graduated this week from the native tribal police training program at the RCMP training academy in Regina.

Graduates are not members of the RCMP, but will serve on Indian band forces in Alberta and Manitoba.

The tribal policing program was established after release of a 1973 federal government report on problems with police service on reserves.

Nine of the graduates are members of the Dakota Ojibway tribal force, which serves eight bands in southwestern Manitoba.

The rest are from Alberta, two from the Hobbema tribal police, six from the Blood tribal police and two from the Saddle Lake tribal police.

Higher crop payments forecast

WINNIPEG (CP) — Crop insurance payments to Manitoba farmers for the current fiscal year are likely to be substantially higher than last year, Agriculture Minister Jim Downey said.

The Manitoba Crop Insurance Corp. expects to pay farmers between $10 million and $12 million — or about double last year's claims—for crop losses covered by all-risk insurance contracts, he said.

Farmers have already been paid $8.5 million by the crop insurance corporation in the current fiscal year which ends March 31, Downey said.

Flooding last spring and late seeding are the major reasons for the higher payments.

NIP gets 25% more in Alberta

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta will receive a 25-percent increase this year in federal funding of the Neighborhood Improvement Program, federal and provincial ministers announced.

The province will receive $5 million under the program. The money will go into 66 communities.

Last year, 44 communities received grants. The program subsidizes community rehabilitation.

Below-average runoff expected

SASKATOON (CP) — Saskatchewan will have a below normal runoff this year, provincial hydrologist Ray Pentland said.

Pentland said the only part of the province where normal runoff is expected is the east-central region bordered by Saskatoon, Yorkton and Hudson Bay.

Runoff will be less because of the dry summer and fall last year and the below normal snow coverage now, he said.
